

The Farmer and The Sparrow

A mother sparrow and her three young ones lived in a cozy nest in a wide field.

One day, when the sparrow was gone to pick grains, the farmer visited the area and said that the crop was ready,

"Tomorrow, I will send my relatives to reap the harvest."

The young sparrow got scared, so when the mother returned, they said,

"Mother, the farmer's relative will reap the harvest tomorrow. Let us look for a shelter somewhere else."

The mother sparrow comforted them and said,

"No, we will stay here. No one will come to cut the crop."

The following day the farmer's relatives did not show up to help him, so he said,

"Does not matter, tomorrow my neighbors will come and help me cut the crop."

The young ones repeated the words to their mother in the evening, but she replied,

"Don't worry, we will stay."

The next day the neighbors did not come to cut the crop, so the farmer said,

"I should not depend on others for my work. Tomorrow, I will cut the crop myself."

The young ones told the mother sparrow about it, and she said,

"We must fly away to another shelter immediately. The crop will certainly be cut tomorrow because the farmer is not dependant on anyone now."

The next morning before sunrise, the mother sparrow and her young ones flew away to another field.

You can only depend on yourself.

