

Prince Siddhartha and The Swan

Prince Siddhartha was walking in the garden and saw an injured swan.

He took it in his hands and found an arrow in its body. Siddhartha took out the arrow and covered the part of the body with a piece of cloth.

The hunter, who had struck the arrow, came to the garden and asked Prince Siddhartha to give the swan to him. The prince told him that because he found him, it was his duty to save its life. The hunter said that he had hunted it, that he should get the swan.

The matter became so serious that they both went to the king's court. The court discussed the situation but could not come to a decision.

At the same time, a saint arrived, and all the members requested his opinion. The saint said,

"Life is valuable. So, the lifesaver should get the swan."

All members became satisfied with his answer, and even the hunter accepted his words.
