Dharmadas was a religious person who followed the principles of Jainism. He was a government employee and was very principle-oriented, sincere, and honest in his work.

He was not corrupt and could never think of doing wrong.

On the contrary, he shared the happiness and the sorrows of others. Because of these qualities of Dharmadas, his officer decided to give him an increment of $100 in his salary.

After hearing this, Dharmadas told the officer,

"Sir, I am satisfied with my life just as it is. I do not need any increment. It may help others if you increase their salary, and that would make me happy."
