

The Two Parrots

Once upon a time, two parrot brothers, Mithu and Titu, went to live with two different families.

Mithu went to live with a very polite family, where they spoke very nicely to everybody.

Titu went to live with a rude family that used inappropriate language all the time. So, he learned to speak badly and was rude all the time.

One day, a king came to the city where the parrots lived. He was looking for a place to rest and saw Titu's house. It looked nice from the outside, so he thought he would go there for a while. As soon as he came near the house, he heard some terrible words coming from inside. It was Titu speaking. The king did not like that, so he did not go into that house. He said,

"I can not stay in a house where even the parrot is rude."

He went a little ahead, and he saw Mithu's house.
He heard a sweet voice saying,

"Please, come in and rest for a while."

The king was happy to hear these soft and sweet words. He came in, and the family welcomed him. When the king left, he gave them a big reward. He also said that Mithu was the most polite parrot in the whole world.

We must use sweet and polite words.
