

The Son Who Refused To Kill Animals

Long ago, lived one butcher in the city of Rajgruha who used to kill animals and sell them to people.

His son Sulas grew up to be different than him, as he met lots of people who believed in Ahinsa. Every day he would hear that it was cruel to kill animals.

The butcher spent all his life killing animals, and over the years, he got a terrible disease. On the day he was on his deathbed, he called his son and said,

"You must also be a butcher. It is my wish."

The son refused to be a butcher and told his father,

"I'm sorry, father, but I can not kill animals."

When his father died, Sulas never killed any animal as he knew that they were living things, and they also felt pain like him. He stood up to his conviction.

Animals feel pain just like us. We must never kill animals.
