

Two Friends

There were two friends, one was blind, and the other was lame and had no legs. They were friends and used to love each other, but they listened to a piece of bad advice, which turned them into enemies.

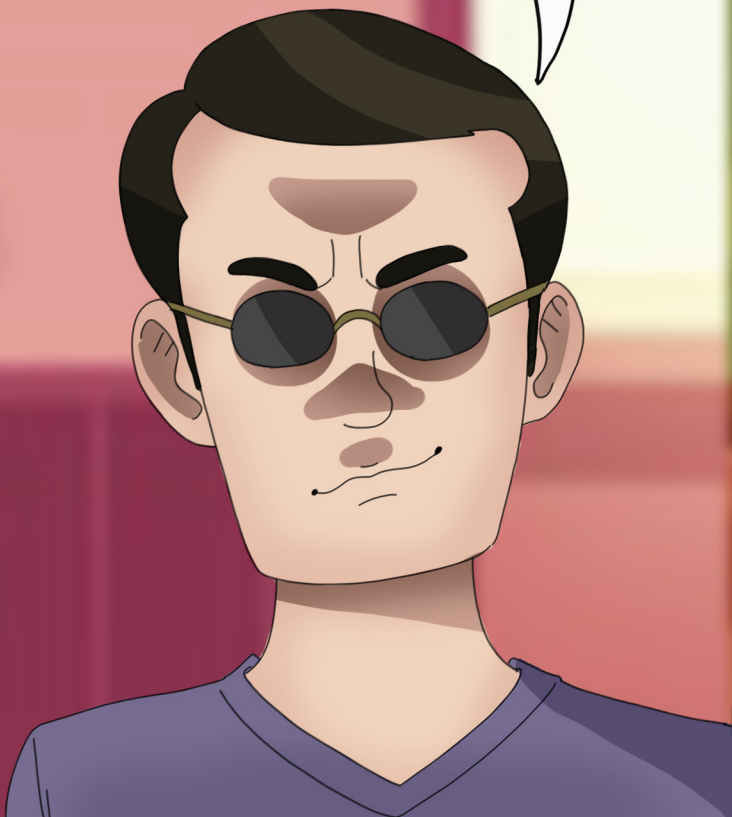

The blind man was jealous that his friend could see, and the lame man was jealous that his blind friend could walk, so the two stopped being friends.

Each went on their way, but over time they did a lot of good deeds. One day because of these good deeds, a god granted them one wish.

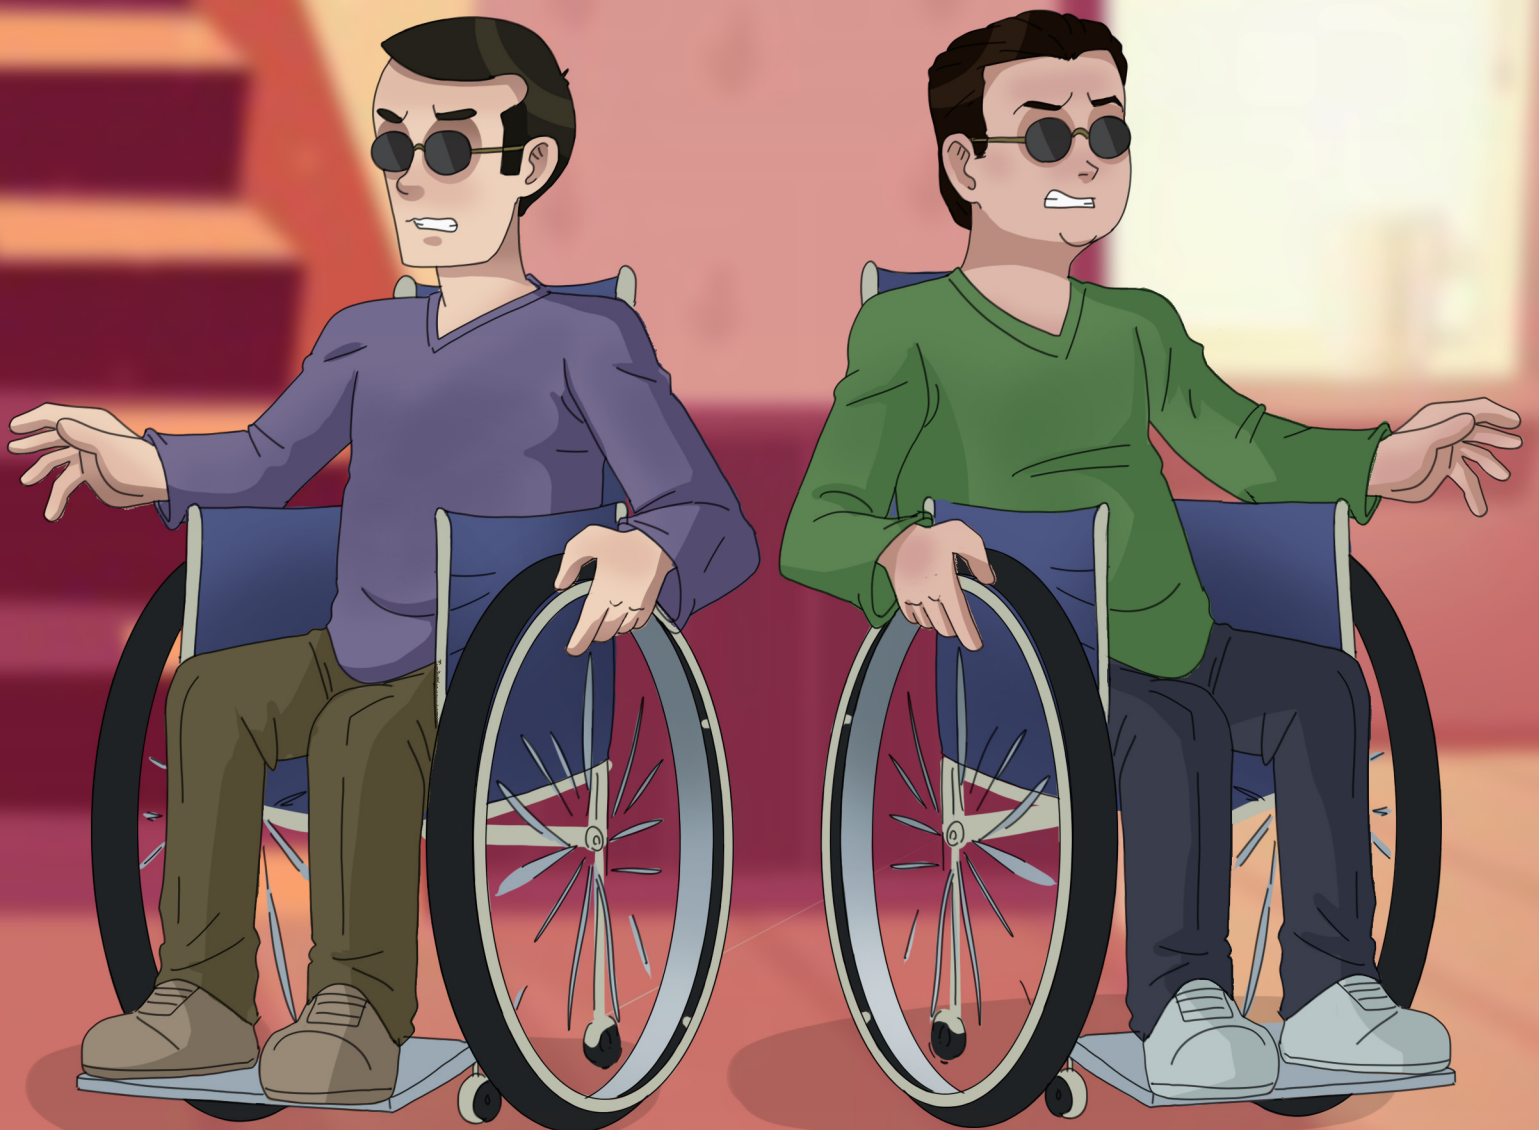

The blind man asked for eyes, and the other asked for legs. But, because they were jealous and wanted to harm each other, the blind friend wished that his lame friend would become blind, and the lame person wished that his blind friend would become lame

So, both friends could neither walk nor see!

After some time, both realized what they did, and felt very bad for their jealousy, but it was too late!

We must not be jealous
