

Who is Bigger?

In the jungle lived two very good friends. One was a monkey and the other an elephant. They played, ate and had a lot of fun together, but one day they got into a fight.

The elephant saw its reflection in the river and was very proud of its huge size.

I am stronger than you,
my monkey friend.

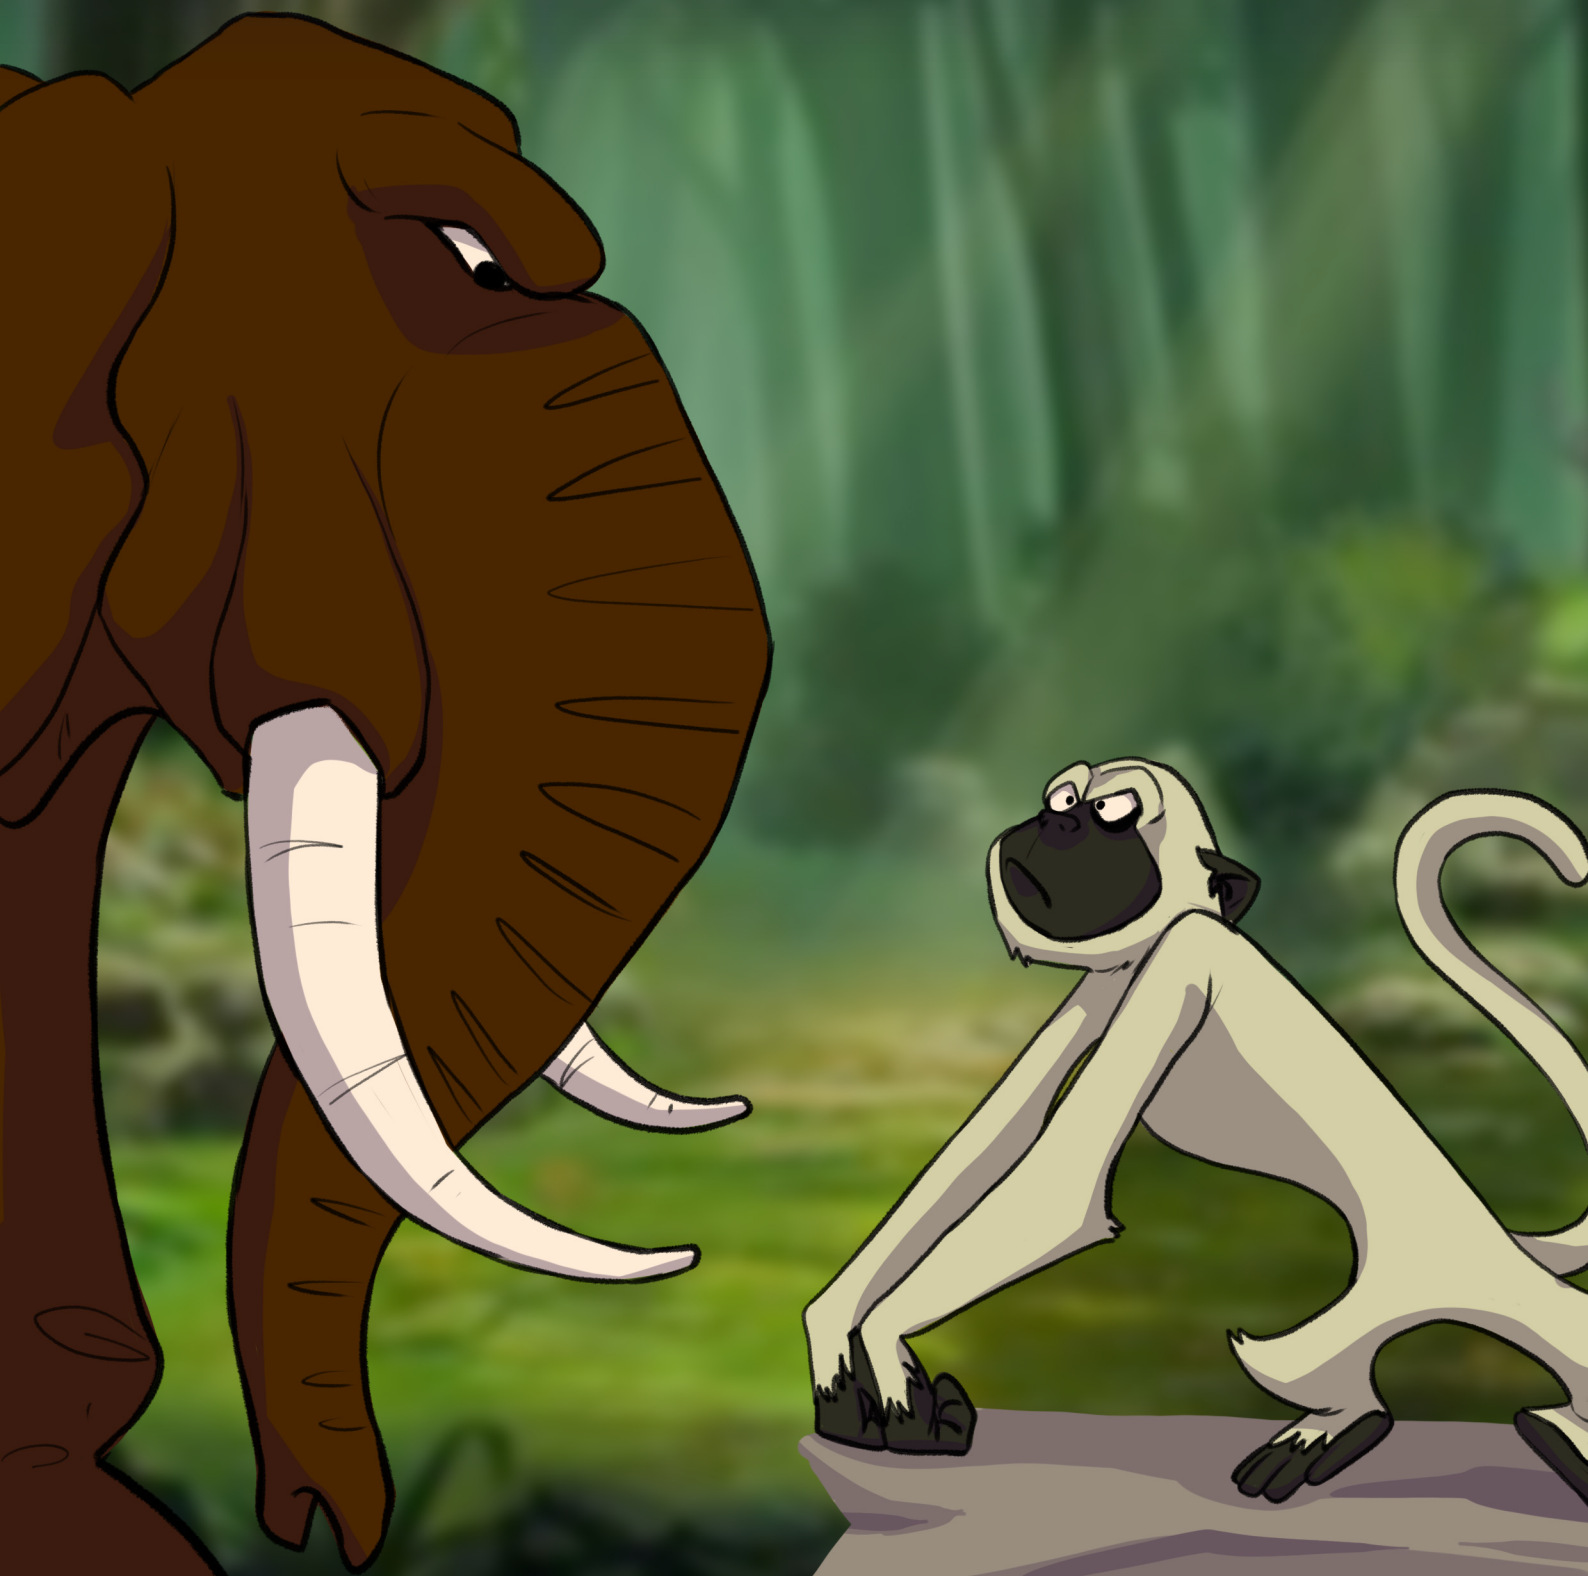

The monkey was proud of its strong arms, legs, and tail.

No, I am stronger. Look how fat I am!

Ha, I am stronger!

The elephant's pride got hurt, and so the monkey and elephant fought for the whole day, as they were very proud of themselves

Finally, tired of fighting, they thought they would go to the most clever animal in the jungle, the owl, to find out who was the stronger one.

Well, first go and get me three mangoes from the tallest tree from the other side of the river

The monkey and the elephant set off to find the tree. The river was flowing very fast that day, so the monkey almost drowned.

Sit on my back

The monkey climbed up, and the two of them went on their way.

When they reached the mango tree, they were surprised to see how huge it was. The mangoes were on the highest branch.

The elephant tried to pull it down, but it was impossible. The monkey quickly jumped on the tree and plucked the mangoes, so they went back to the owl, who took the mangoes and thanked them.

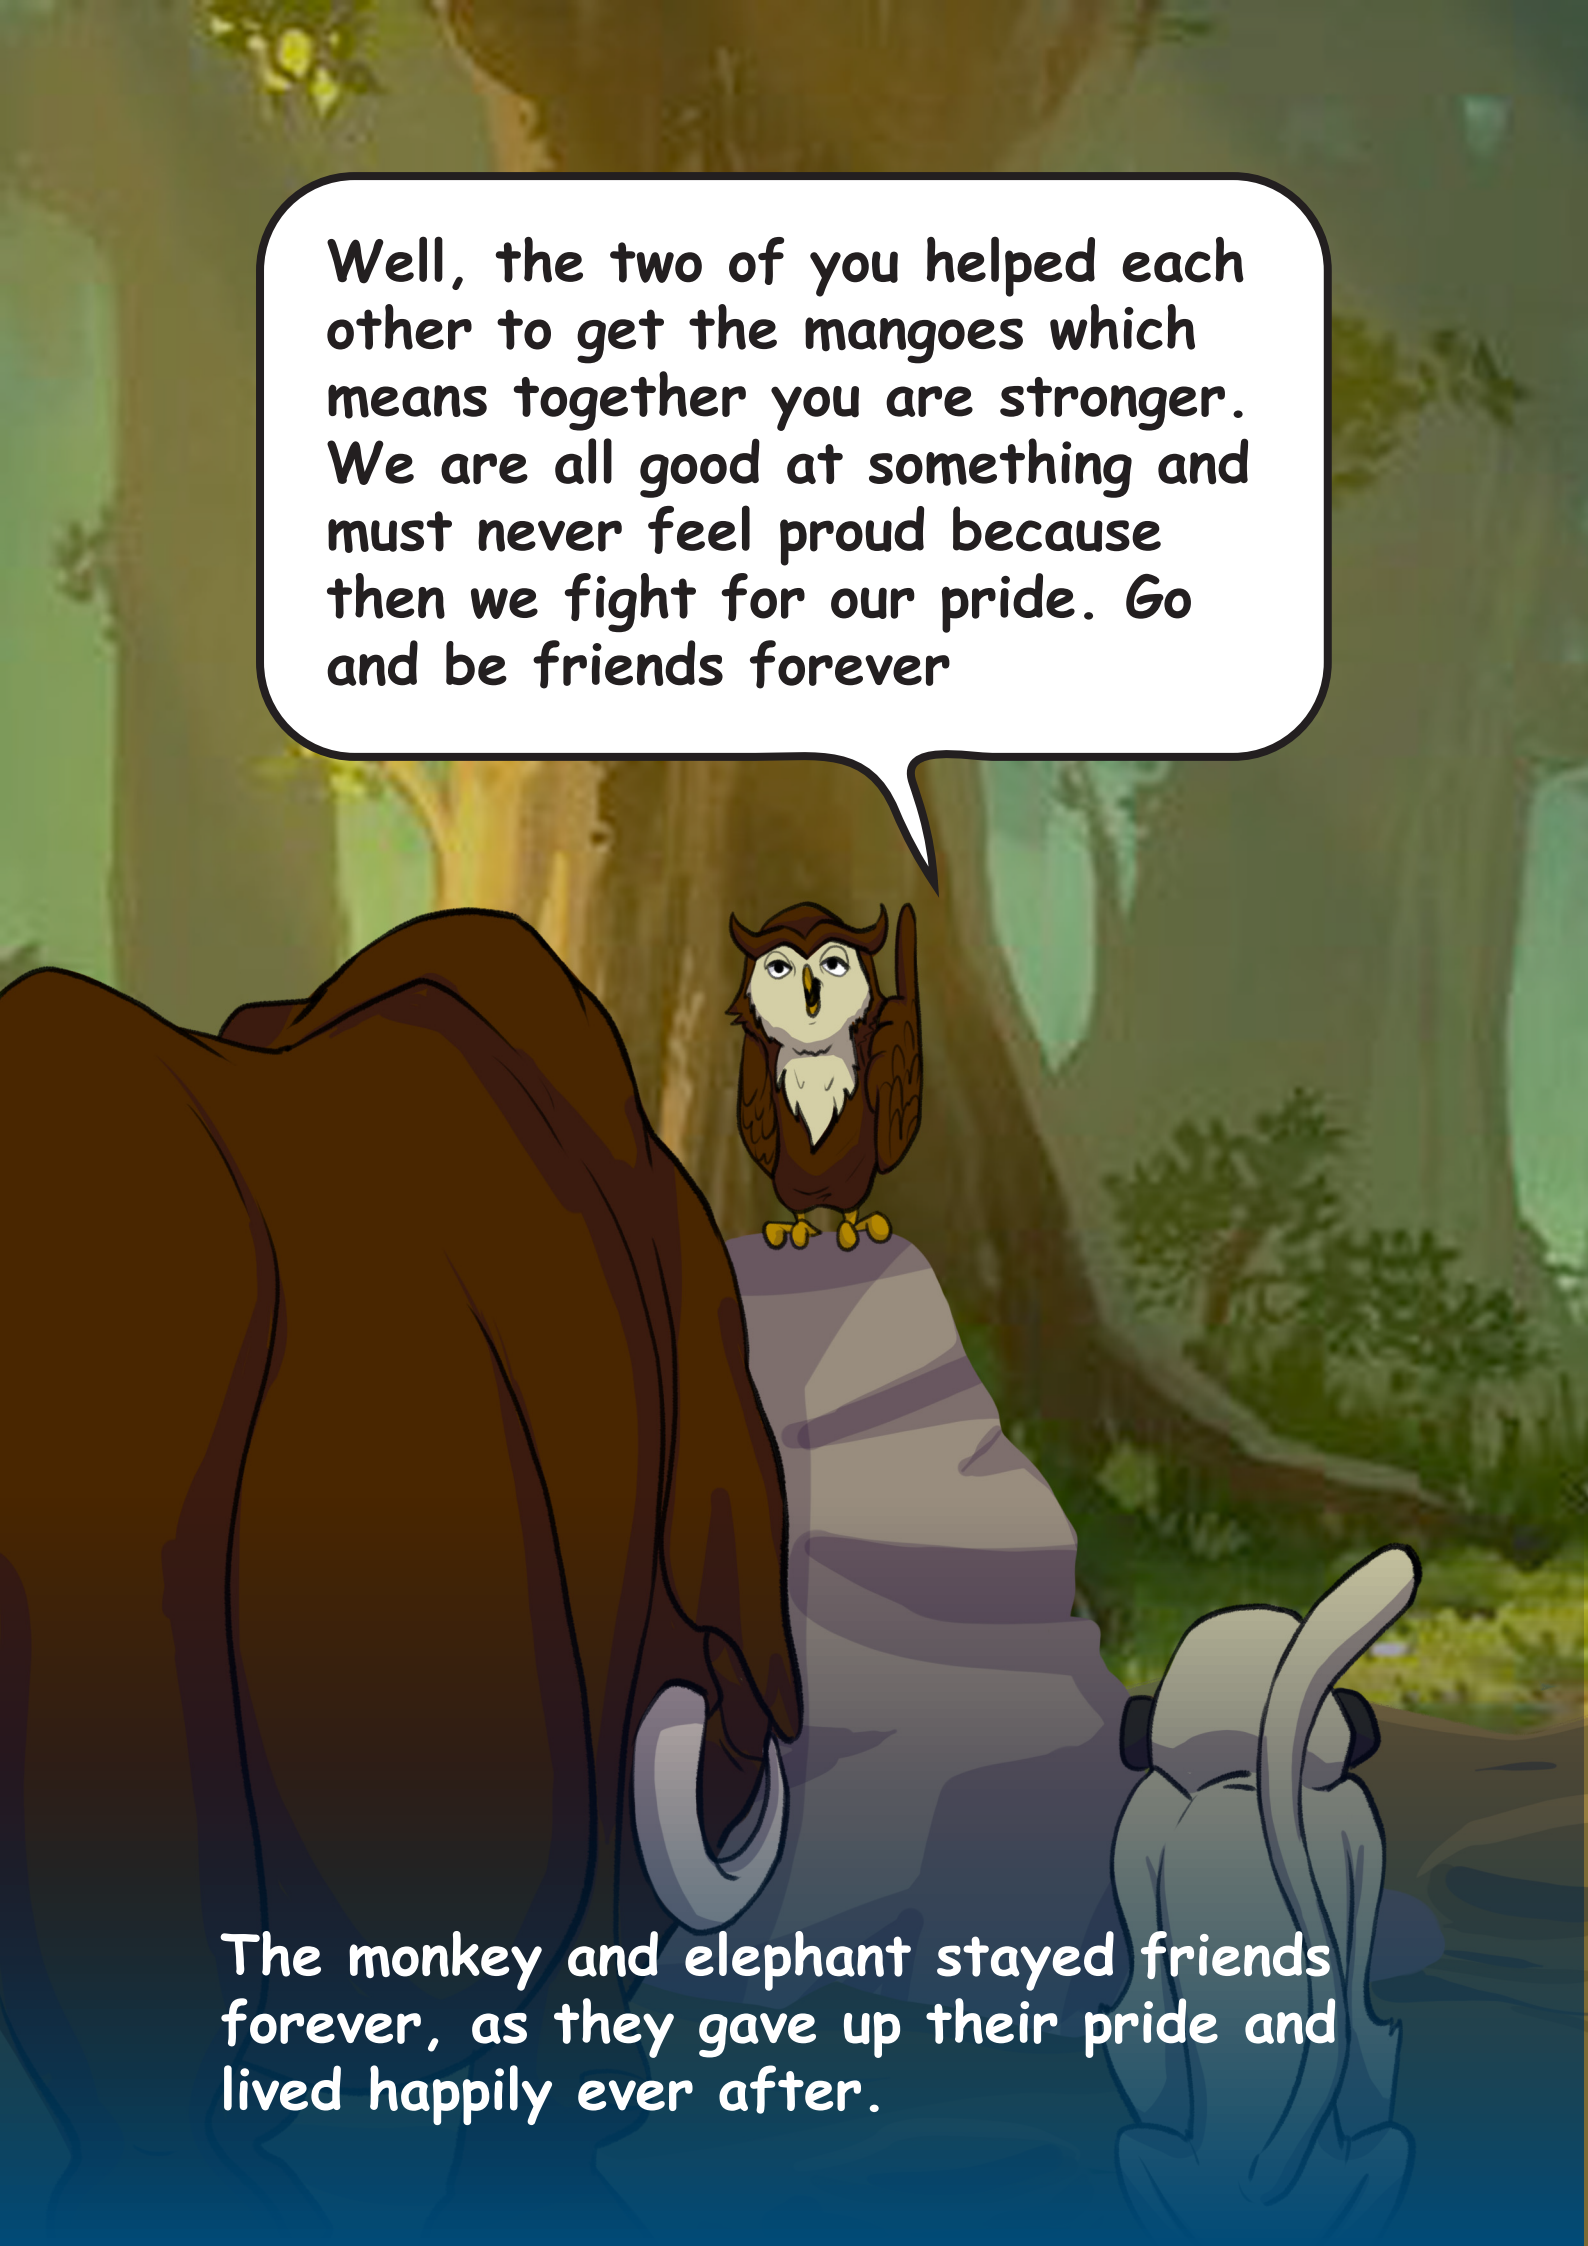

Monkey, how did you cross the river?

Elephant, how did you get the mangoes?

The monkey told him how he sat on the elephant's back and crossed the river

The elephant told him how the monkey had jumped up and brought the mangoes from the highest branches.

An owl with brown feathers and a white chest is perched on a grey rock. It has its wings slightly raised and is looking towards the left. In the foreground, the back of a monkey's head and the back of an elephant's head are visible, both looking towards the owl. The background is a lush green forest with large trees.

Well, the two of you helped each other to get the mangoes which means together you are stronger. We are all good at something and must never feel proud because then we fight for our pride. Go and be friends forever

The monkey and elephant stayed friends forever, as they gave up their pride and lived happily ever after.

We must give up our pride to be able to live a happy life.
