Questions to Ask Before Finalising Your Estate Planning Pricing

To price your services and solutions fairly, there are many factors that you need to consider in addition to your hourly rate and time commitment.

Here's a list of the 10 questions we recommend you ask yourself when determining your pricing for your estate planning services:

- 1 How many moving parts and complex issues are involved?
- 2 Are you offering customer experience items that add additional value e.g. meeting at their home, after hours communications, urgent delivery?
- 3 What would it cost to reach the same outcome if there was a family provision application or dispute after death?
- 4 What non-financial benefits are your services giving to your client and their beneficiaries e.g. peace of mind, easing anxiety?
- 5 Are you creating any tax savings for the beneficiaries e.g. minimising tax on superannuation death benefits, income tax savings from utilising a testamentary trust?
- 6 How many years of experience do you need to be able to solve the client's problem?
- 7 Did you need to purchase precedents, templates and training in order to provide this solution to the client?
- 8 What risks are you taking responsibility for that need to be factored into the price (e.g. the risk that you could be sued by a beneficiary in the future)?
- 9 What is the minimum price you can charge for this solution or service without losing money?
- 10 How does your pricing compare to alternative solutions available to the client?
