However, his true passion was being an entrepreneur.

While at his corporate job, Fenwick began taking each of his passions (including recording and producing music, martial arts, coaching and marketing) and turning them into profitable little businesses that combined surpassed his 6-figure corporate salary and he quit his $100,000 A Year Job. Little did Fenwick know that after purchasing a piece of music equipment for his recording studio from a stranger, who later became one of his best friends, that he would develop his biggest passion of all, "the stock market". His new friend encouraged him to learn how the stock market works and how to "actively" find, research, analyze and buy and sell stocks.

Fenwick began learning about the stock market from his friend and spending countless hours studying the stock market, even hiring a personal coach to accelerate his learning. He started investing (holding) in stocks and then began trading (flipping) stocks. He developed a talent and skill for flipping stocks. He began telling his friends about how the stock market works and they began asking him to teach them. They also began telling others about him and soon Fenwick was getting request from across the country to teach how the stock market works and how to flip stocks. That's when Fenwick started FlipThatStock.com
