TRAUMA-INFORMED SUPPORT THROUGH STUDENT VOICE AND EDUCATOR WELLNESS

TEACHERS • ADMINISTRATORS • COUNSELORS
SOCIAL WORKERS • CHILD ADVOCACY PROFESSIONALS

- Gathering Student Voice
- Trauma-Informed Practices
- Meeting the Social-Emotional Wellness Needs of Students
- Educator Wellness

Founders of both organizations have been committed to these topics since before they were acknowledged as best practices. Their personal commitment to supporting schools and organizations through a comprehensive, practitioner-developed approach in their efforts to redesign cultures is unparalleled. Plan to join this webinar for an overview, a few strategies, and best of all some encouragement to take with you.

Now more than ever, schools need to address the social-emotional needs of children and staff to ensure they create spaces for learning and wellness. Join us to hear from practitioners and nationally recognized authors who have developed tools to help you develop a comprehensive approach to school-wide social-emotional learning. You'll leave with ideas to help you get started on your journey to school-wide wellness.

"Having the opportunity to provide a district level professional development, completely focused on the wounded student, has been a hallmark experience for our organization. Without question, Dr. Hendershott's time with our system set the tone for this school year."

C. Wayne Lovell, Ph.D.
Mountain Education Charter High School

"Sometimes we in education want to jump straight to replicating what we see. Working with The Centergy Project, we took our time by starting with gathering student voice because we wanted to get it right. Now our students get to see people they've never seen before in this building investing in their futures."

Jeremy Williams, Superintendent
Gainesville City School System
