Apaca Point is a historical site from the World War II era, known for its natural beauty and intricate Japanese defensive fortifications.

Read the signs located around the park to answer the following questions.

1. How were the pillboxes constructed? ________________________________________________________
   _____________________________________________________________________________________

2. How were the pillboxes camouflaged?  _______________________________________________________
   _____________________________________________________________________________________

Learn more by using the War in the Pacific National Historical Park’s mobile web app at wapa.toursphere.com or call the cell phone audio tour at 866-418-3963. Press 4 to hear about Apaca Point’s history. Listen and answer the questions below:

3. Who did the Japanese force to build the pillboxes? ____________________________________________
   _____________________________________________________________________________________

4. According to Japanese Lieutenant Colonel Takeda, how did the 38th Infantry Regiment plan to respond if the U.S. Marines Corps reached the shoreline? ____________________________________________
   _____________________________________________________________________________________

Take a closer look at the pillbox and invasion beach. Then answer the following questions.

5. Why do you think the pillboxes were built facing the reef at an angle? ______________________________
   _____________________________________________________________________________________

6. How do you think the Japanese soldiers felt as they watched the US landing ships fill the horizon? __________________________________
   _____________________________________________________________________________________

7. What do you think the conditions were like for the Japanese soldiers hidden inside the pillboxes? __________________________________
   _____________________________________________________________________________________

This publication was provided by:

[Image of Pacific Historic Parks logo]
Apaca Point is a historical site from the World War II era, known for its natural beauty and intricate Japanese defensive fortifications.

Read the signs located around the park to answer the following questions.

1. How were the pillboxes constructed? They were carved into limestone rock, and fortified with concrete.
2. How were the pillboxes camouflaged? Rocks were set into the pillbox's concrete walls.

Learn more by using the War in the Pacific National Historical Park's mobile web app at wapa.toursphere.com or call the cell phone audio tour at 866-418-3963. Press 4 to hear about Apaca Point's history. Listen and answer the questions below:

3. Who did the Japanese force to build the pillboxes? CHamoru & Koreans Laborers
4. According to Japanese Lieutenant Colonel Takeda, how did the 38th Infantry Regiment plan to respond if the U.S. Marines Corps reached the shoreline? They would carry out a counter attack in the direction of the ocean before the Marines could secure a foothold.

Take a closer look at the pillbox and invasion beach. Then answer the following questions.

5. Why do you think the pillboxes were built facing the reef at an angle? A side-angle view allowed the soldiers posted at the gun ports to have greater vision of the reef and the enemy.
6. How do you think the Japanese soldiers felt as they watched the US landing ships fill the horizon? Answers will vary – some may include: feeling scared; hopeless, determined, panicked

7. What do you think the conditions were like for the Japanese soldiers hidden inside the pillboxes? Answers will vary – students may mention poor nutrition, cramped spaces, poor lighting or visibility.