Editorial Note Literature Today, Vol. 6, is in your hands. This anthology takes into account the theme of Separation taken up by poets and writers of varied milieu. Poems and stories included in this issue highlight the theme in a very unique way. Each work is full of literary beauty and represents contemporary conscience. Read, share and enjoy! Cheers for Literature! Cheers for Life!

Best wishes Dr. Pradeep Chaswal Dr. Deepak Chaswal A child chide by A. P. Arendt

From the crest of heavens folds a sharp spur of pain And spasms cramp along my nursing body Also fall tears, contained for serotinous rain After telling no more children sleeping stories. And the years pass, everyday's class But the wound never fades away Bleeding sorrows, hoping tomorrows Will last more than nowadays. Even though I missed goodbyes Separation reached its way deep in Telling to always forbid anodyne lies Telling pain doesn't ache because of our sins... No! It hurts to give birth to something greater For unbounded, love will last far much later.

After the Death of Her Wife by Adam Szetela On a farm in New Hampshire my aunt knits scarves and sweaters on her porch, overflowing wicker baskets to bring to the homeless shelter. Her garden, full of tomatoes beans, and cucumbers, fills the bellies of the children down the road whose families live in mobile homes. Before bed, she breathes color into her easel, painting the beloved disciples and saints whose images cast in oil decorate her chapel's walls. From early morning until late night she knits, gardens, and paints to prevent her mind from wandering and to fill her heart with warmth.

Wrong Turn by Aine Collins You have followed the road that leads to destruction you have walked it barefoot for miles until your feet bled and your heart ached you are on the wrong track you are weary of dead ends and thorny bristles piercing your sides this is a choking way you have chosen a path of broken glass
