NICK BAZEB AHL AND THE RED TUNNELS By Debra Chapoton Copyright 2011 by Debra Chapoton Kindle Edition CHAPTER 1 The Key I didn't have it all figured out yet, but I was pretty sure that my trip down the forbidden tunnels wasn't even the first time I had been here. I didn't recognize the room I found myself in. All the furniture was red – the sofa, the chairs, the lamps, the table, the books on the shelves, the rug on the floor. Even the ceiling and walls were red. The only thing that wasn't red was the door. I supposed I'd have to open it to get out. Duh. It was the only door and there weren't any windows. Weird room. I walked over to the clean, white door and put my hand on the crystal knob. I turned and pulled and nothing happened. Locked. This wasn't good. There was a keyhole below the knob and I crouched down to look through. Unbelievable! Really. You won't in a million years believe what I saw through that keyhole. So I'll just tell you. I saw myself. No, not like a mirror image. More like a movie – just a little video clip – like five seconds of my life playing over and over. Me, picking up a red key. I'm not into pondering. My mom likes to ponder. If I ask for something expensive she says, "Let me ponder about that, Nicky," and then, after she talks to dad, she tells me that she's thought it over and the answer is . . . sometimes "yes" and sometimes "wait until Christmas". So, no pondering for me now, I don't want to wait until Christmas to get out of this room. I looked through that keyhole again, watched that little video of me and I knew just what to do. Of course, I didn't know I was going to have to fight off seven bat-like creatures just to pick up a key. CHAPTER 2 The Red Tunnel We've had bats in the house before so I know all about how to duck when they swoop over your head. My brother, Luke, and I usually laugh our socks off at the way mom and our little sister, Gracie, scream and hide.
