She dangled the cherry in front of her lips, sticking her tongue out to grab the fruit into her mouth. She knew that she had the attention of every man in the room. But there was only one man that she wanted to come over to her. He had been sitting over at a table in the corner for the last twenty minutes, working on a pitcher of beer. His eyes had been glued to her, hence the show she was putting on. "Wouldn't I love to be that cherry." Lucia sat her glass down on the bar counter. "I'm sure that you would," she replied to the stranger. As she leaned over, he got a full view of her round D cup breasts. She was careful to flirt with the stranger in front of her just enough to make her admirer at the corner table more intrigued versus turned off. "How about the two of us take off for the night? Get to know one another." "Thank you, honey. But I think I like being solo tonight." She smiled, trying to let him down as easy as possible. The stranger shrugged. "Your loss." With major attitude, he walked off. From the corner of her eye, Lucia could see that her admirer was still watching. She was sure that she warmed him up at this point and that he would be making his way over to her shortly. Lucia turned her back to him and asked the bartender for a seltzer water. He wiped the counter down and gave her the drink. As she sipped, Lucia could feel the presence of someone behind her. "I have been watching you all evening and I think that you are gorgeous."
