IntroductionCreating living, breathing characters is one of the most challenging aspects of writing and roleplaying. It is also the one that we find ourselves doing regularly for a variety of reasons. No matter what kind of creation we're doing, every story needs characters, from the main character, to the nameless NPC, and everyone in between. Flat, one-dimensional characters can ruin an otherwise great story. If you're a writer, no one is going to care about your epic political allegory if they can't relate to any of your characters. If you're a roleplayer, it's hard to find roleplay partners or have fun in a group if no one finds your characters interesting. The goal of this book is to help you build a character that is dynamic, compelling, and alive by thinking as deeply about that character as their own person separate from yourself.This book is intended to be used for new characters and existing characters alike. Each page is dated, so you may use it for journal prompts to develop a character little by little each day. But these dates are simply guidelines. Feel free to skip around, write about the questions on the wrong days, or ignore the dates altogether. These questions are in no particular order. They are simply a collection of musings for you, the character creator, to consider.Depending on the context of the character, not all questions may be applicable. Writers using this book are encouraged to adapt the question to fit the character or imagine the character in an alternate universe where the question is applicable, or whatever creative alternative you can think of.Some questions may require research into the concept of the question being posed, but most questions are simple concepts that should require no research to consider.Before you start answering each question in this book however, let's get down a few basic pieces of information about your character. This is the framework you'll want to refer back to as you answer the questions in this book.Grab your favorite notebook or journal, and note the following things, then get ready to dive into the questions!Character Name: Write the name of the character, so you know what to call themCharacter Bio: Write whatever you know about the character's history and personality. This will be fleshed out as you answer questions in this book. What you write here is just your starting point. Refer back to this periodically to make sure you're on track
