Dale pulled into the hotel parking lot. He had driven for more than seven and a half hours and was ready for some shut eye before attending his buddy Martin's bachelor party. Dale hauled his suitcase up to the desk. "May I help you?" a cute little blonde slipped her hair over her shoulder and batted her lashes at him. "Yes you may..." Dale smiled back. Her flirtatious tone giving him a mental boost, he looked at the name tag on her burgundy blazer. "Jessica. I have a reservation. The name is Dale Harris." His eyes now wandered to the creamy mounds peeking out of her 'V' neck blouse while she looked him up on the computer. "I have you right here, Dale." She handed him some papers. "If you can just sign here." She pointed to a line at the bottom of the contract and held out a pen. Dale signed his name and she handed him a key fob, surprised when she brushed her fingers over his hand. "You will be in room 216. Have a lovely stay, and if there is anything you need just call the front desk, Dale." Dale nodded and turned away. Had she just stressed the word 'anything' or had he only heard what he wanted to hear? "Umm, thank you." He said as he walked toward the elevator. Dale entered his room, hung his jacket on the coat rack inside the door and pushed his suitcase in the corner. He turned on the television, set the alarm on his phone to go off in two hours and lay back on the bed. A smile spread over his lips as he thought of the cute little desk clerk. He kicked his shoes off and closed his eyes. Dale wondered if there would be a stripper at the bachelor party then chuckled to himself. "Of course there will be. What kind of bachelor party doesn't involve a stripper?" Dale awoke to the beeping of his alarm. He stretched and rolled out of the bed, stumbled to the bathroom and turned on the shower. After shaving and dressing, Dale grabbed his keys and left his room. As he walked through the hotel lobby, he glanced over at the reception desk. Jessica wasn't there. He nodded at the young man now behind the desk, zipped up his jacket and walked to his car. *** Dale pulled up to Martin's new house. He hadn't seen his buddy in years and was looking forward to catching up. He knocked on the door and was greeted by a man he had not met before. "Hi." He cleared his throat. "I'm looking for Martin Roberts."
