Dead Rednecks on a Friday Night is a work of fiction. Though actual locations may be mentioned, they are used in a fictitious manner and the events and occurrences were invented in the mind and imagination of the author except for the inclusion of actual historical facts. Similarities of characters or names used within to any person – past, present, or future – are coincidental except where actual historical characters are purposely interwoven.

From the dark streets of Knoxville to the hills and hollers of the Smoky Mountains... dead rednecks are stacking up like cordwood. Private eye Howard Qualls, fearless paragon of justice, is on the case... and his older, smarter, tougher ex-con brother Hoss is tagging along to make sure Howard doesn't get himself killed.

In this third story of the Dead Rednecks! series, Hoss Qualls doesn't take it kindly when a couple of thugs lean on his little brother Howard – it seems Howard's investigations are hitting too close to home for someone. Can Hoss solve the case despite the interference of his old enemies in the sheriff's department ... and the help of his bumbling brother?

Chapter One

It was hot as hell in Knoxville. I had given a long, mean stare at the World's Fair Sun Sphere when I drove past it; I suspected the Lord was punishing us with a heat wave for allowing that tacky structure to dominate our skyline for thirty years.

I made my way down Magnolia and parked my truck on the curb outside the rundown used record store where my nutty little brother Howard kept his detective office. I squinted as I walked to the glass door; the sunlight reflected off the sidewalk was blinding. I was at least assured I wasn't likely to stumble into any exiting customers, as the joint rarely had any.

It wasn't much cooler inside the store, but at least it was darker. The owner, a twenty-something guy I knew only as Stoney, lounged behind the sales counter and stared glassy-eyed at the oscillating metal fan in front of him.

"Hey, Hoss," he said, when he noticed me.

"Hello, Stoney. You know, I don't think I've ever seen a customer in here."

"Dude," he replied. "This place is an undiscovered treasure."

"Maybe somebody would discover it if they knew what it is," I said. "I mean, the sign outside says Stoney's Wax Emporium, but it doesn't say anything anywhere about records. Folks might think you're selling floor wax. Though, come to think of it, that might bring you more business. Does anyone even have turntables to play vinyl records anymore?"

"The connoisseurs do, man."

I picked up an album from the cardboard box nearest me. "Half of your records are by Freddie Fender." *
