CHAPTER THREE

PREFACE

Richard could not believe what had happened at Dexter's. The love of his life and his mistress had become closer than he had thought and it broke his heart to the core to know that he knew nothing about it. It was as if every day after the affair became a worse day for him from the last. Every day became heavier to deal with than the last and everything came back to bite him in the ass. Jenny's eyes had a glint of unnerve, no shame and sarcasm. She had made him cheat on his wife and now she was with his wife. He did not like admitting but he had developed a bitter taste in his mouth for Jenny, and he was willing to spit her out if Jenny let him.

CHAPTER ONE

Richard was determined to put away all the nonsense and chaos that had become his life but he had no way of doing so. He collapsed in the sofa, the very same sofa he had cried on when his life had first taken a turn for the worst. It was the same sofa that Richard had reached great ecstasies with both Sue and Jenny. He felt terrible; that was a feeling that had followed him ever since the day he found Sue sitting on the couch and confronted him about his infidelity.

He was sure there was no turning back and changing everything that happened in his life but he knew that there was no easy way out. He felt his groin leap when he remembered how Sue had come back to the house and found him kissing Rose. He sat up long enough to realize that he was not sure whether his sexual being was craving for the sex he had with his wife or if he was truly just attracted to Rose.

He felt it, he knew it, and he knew that the feeling was mutual. So much had changed about Rose; she had always been a fun to hang around, but this time he had seen her as a raw sexy woman in all her beauty. She was like a gentle goddess who did not know she had the power to subdue men just by being in the room. Richard had fallen under her spell and even if Sue had interrupted what was about to happen; when their lips locked, Richard wanted to finish what Rose had started.

He looked at a picture in a broken frame on the wall, he felt his head spin when he remembered how he had broken that frame while drunk and confused because he did not know who Sue had become. In the picture they both looked very happy; there was just serenity in their eyes. He felt an ironic feeling of nostalgia like they had been there before but deep down he knew his mind was playing tricks on him; they were no longer the people in the frame of the picture. The broken glass captured the essence of where they were perfectly.

That day they had gone for a walk in the park and some artsy type guy had approached them and told them that he wanted to take a picture of them. Feeling young and free, they had trusted the stranger and let him capture an intimacy they did not even know they possessed, and put it in a picture. He mailed the picture just as he had promised and when they both saw it; they couldn't help but mail the guy a handsome check and Richard's business card. He was now working for the media company and captured some of the most memorable scenes for the country.

Richard started thinking about how many people in the company he related to personally. He knew each and every one of them personally no matter their rank and he made sure he was truly interested in their affairs, helping out where he could. He began wondering what they were thinking about him and whether they believed his story or the madness that was in the media.

He started walking into the kitchen and even his steps were directing him to the drinks cabinet that he had sworn to stay away from. The last time he took one drink for consolation, he had ended up a big mess and that was a place he was not willing to go back to. He went over to the "wall of shame" as Sue liked to call it. She had named it that because it was a great big old excuse for her not to cook.

On the wall she had stuck several menus, their prices and the days they were served at specific restaurants. They had consulted that wall too many times and Sue always picked because she was picky with what her body wanted. Luckily for him, Richard loved every choice and chose not to bother with takeout. Lately every time he tried to pick something from the wall of shame he took a long time to decide. It made him appreciate Sue more and want her back but every time he saw her he felt like he knew her less.

What was she doing with Jenny? Was it her idea or Jenny's idea? Was it some phase they were going through trying to console themselves because of the hurt he had inflicted on them, or were they just mean? Maybe they were trying to experiment because men were no longer an option for them? Millions of questions went through his mind, but he decided to ignore them as he picked the unhealthiest combo on the wall. Unlike everything else in his life, he knew the burger, fries and chicken would be warm and comforting; and he wouldn't have to worry about feeling guilty after eating them. *

Richard is at the end of his ropes; facing opposition from everyone around him but his sister and Rose, his lawyer. Sue and Jenny's relationship seems to get a little rocky. Has she started to realize that her actions went a little too far? Is Jenny getting too invested in the revenge plans and will her love for Sue grow into a fruitful love affair? And will everything be rectified before Richard stands before an ethical tribunal in a trial to determine his future? Everything happens so quickly and the events of what happened to Richard after his marriage falls apart are all the drama anyone can face in a lifetime.
