Hitty and the Halloween Pumpkin Patch Hunt

Part 1 of the Hitty Holiday Series

There was only one more day before Halloween. Ghouls and goblins hung from houses, colorful lights were strung to light a haunted pathway, and kids were all atwitter awaiting the night they could trick or treat door to door. Cobwebs were strung above their doorways.

And at night, creepy crawly creatures clung to those cobwebs.

The lights glowed, flickering in the windows as dark approached. Hitty was baking cookies, with cutouts of bats and circle sugar cookies were transformed into pumpkins with the magic of icing. Her Halloween apron, tied snugly about her waist, was dotted with flour where she had dusted her hands as she started a stack of goodies for her Halloween visitors.

Hitty Maribelle walked in. She lifted her nose high in the air, sniffing about as her sweet tooth tingled at the thought of such sugary goodness. She licked her lips and ran it across her teeth. She had dabbled in the candy bowl, tasting the treats, both big and small.

Miss Hitty Belle Lee came down the stairs. She had been finishing laundry, folding linens and putting them away in the linen closet. She tsk-tsked the condition of Hitty Maribelle's room it had been such a mess. Even her best broom had difficulty sweeping about when bits of this and that seemed to be hiding in every corner.

"What are you doing?" asked Miss Hitty Belle Lee.

Hitty Maribelle jumped. It wasn't as if she was caught with her hand in the cookie jar, but the thought was mighty tempting as she watched Hitty put the cookies in one by one. Her guilty conscience made itself more apparent, but Miss Hitty Belle Lee ignored it. Hitty Maribelle, after all, was still young and had a lot to learn.

"I was in my room when I smelled something awful delicious!" said Hitty Maribelle. "Hitty is making some Halloween cookies, and I thought just maybe she might offer me one to taste test."

"Well, let's go see if it's possible!" said Miss Hitty Belle Lee. She, too, had wandered from her chores as the smell of sugar cookies had wafted through the air to reach her tiny nose.

Hitty was just putting the finishing touches on a cookie when it dawned on her. They had cookies and the ingredients for punch, apples to bob for, and even some dry-ice to make some spooky mist at their Halloween party. They even had music with clanking chains and spooky voices to incite the scariest of scenes in the party-goers heads.

What they didn't have was the perfect pumpkin to set down upon the step to greet her guests.

She was drying her hands on her kitchen towel as Hitty Maribelle and Miss Hitty Belle Lee entered the kitchen. Hitty Maribelle was a bit mismatched with her bright orange dress on and hot pink pinafore, while Miss Hitty Belle Lee was toned down a bit in her flowing floor length dress dotted with autumn leave. Hitty has covered up her pretty green dress with her white apron so she could get messy with her cookies and not worry a bit. She took it off, however, because she had a sole purpose in mind.

Pumpkin patch hunting!

"We have somewhere to go!" said Hitty. She took the remaining cookies and placed them in the cookie jar. Hitty Maribelle and Miss Hitty Belle Lee couldn't disguise their deflated expression. "Oh, don't look so sad! Ta-da!" *

Hitty and her friends need to find the perfect pumpkin before Halloween! A party is planned, but Hitty cannot find the perfect pumpkin, so her friends Miss Hitty Belle Lee and Hitty Maribelle decide to join her in a hunt for just the right one. What will Hitty find? Will Hitty Maribelle be spooked by scary sounds? Or will they decide to spend Halloween lost in a corn maze?
