When I started working at the Council for American Morals, I never thought it'd end up like this. I thought it'd just be a few months of dull, painless contract work and a few good fat paychecks. Never in my wildest dreams did I think I'd be where I am now.

Where I am now is my boss's office. Nothing unusual about that, surely? Well, let me let you into the conversation that my boss is having with his secretary. You might change your thinking. This is what he's saying.

"Oh, Farren! I like the things you say to me, Farren."

Oh, that got your interest, all right. Why on earth would a respectable, happily married manager at America's most upstanding protector of common decency and traditional family values have cause to say a thing like that to his secretary?

Well, I'd guess that it's because his tie is currently round his wrists, securing them to his generously padded chair, the chair that's usually a symbol of his power and his authority, and now it's the instrument of his submission.

And his secretary, Farren. Her blouse is lying on the luxurious carpet next to her abandoned heels. Her bust is straining at her bra. She's gently touring round and round her helpless boss, giving him a view from all angles, and every so often she bends to hiss insistently into his ear.

"Just imagine if the Board could see you now, George! The CEO! The Chairman! All those people you spend so much time sucking up to, trying to schmooze your way into their good books. They think you're a good man, a respectable man, an honorable man. Are you?" *

George has been having an affair with his secretary Farren for the past few weeks - and they both work for America's premier family values lobbyist! Contract IT temp Steve spies on their emails and discovers the illicit affair - and if anyone knew about it, they would lose their jobs, marriages and happy lives. So, with that ace in the hole, Steve decides to spy on the two lovebirds as they get it on with each other...but will he end up getting more than he bargained for?

Warning: This adults-only 4,000 word tale contains voyeurism, hypocrisy, two married people cheating on their spouses, invasion of privacy, a titillating threesome, and an explosively orgasmic finale.

"Oh, Farren! I like the things you say to me, Farren."

Oh, that got your interest, all right. Why on earth would a respectable, happily married manager at America's most upstanding protector of common decency and traditional family values have cause to say a thing like that to his secretary?

Well, I'd guess that it's because his tie is currently round his wrists, securing them to his generously padded chair, the chair that's usually a symbol of his power and his authority, and now it's the instrument of his submission.

And his secretary, Farren. Her blouse is lying on the luxurious carpet next to her abandoned heels. Her bust is straining at her bra. She's gently touring round and round her helpless boss, giving him a view from all angles, and every so often she bends to hiss insistently into his ear.

"Just imagine if the Board could see you now, George! The CEO! The Chairman! All those people you spend so much time sucking up to, trying to schmooze your way into their good books. They think you're a good man, a respectable man, an honorable man. Are you?"

"Yes!" he says defiantly, straining at his bonds, while something else strains twice as hard against the front of his tailored pants. "I'm not going to be tempted into sin by the likes of you!"

It's all a game, of course. A charade. A put-up job. They've been getting together in his office like this for nearly a month, every Thursday. The executives all have their big meeting, and everyone else hides in their office while they wait to hear what's going to happen. All of them just as quiet as little church mice. And that makes Thursday afternoon the ideal afternoon to do anything that you don't want anyone else to find out about. Most of the people here are far too blue eyed and innocent, good little soldiers of the Lord, for anything more than surfing for depressingly vanilla porn, or checking out the nearby boys on Grindr. It takes all sorts to run such an upstanding organisation as the Council for American Morals.
