Lady, rust of feet,
her time is near.
Lost in the dust,
her hair long, reaching
down her back,
rust.

Her toes are bare.
She moves the pace of a snail. I her saw during summertime.
Now, I see her
at Summer Best
close to the rail,
two days after the hazy white pale.

Should I say something to see where she's coming
From?
Or, does her presence says all
that needs mention?
Though,
when it's all
said & done, there's no need to deny.
Should I cry for her, because I see myself in her. Like her, my time is near.

That’s inevitable.
There’s no choosing
this day or the next.

Rust affects the strongest of metals
when left in the open air. Where is my mettle? All I could do is stare.

As wide as the
tared city streets,
I see her now
as she rubs her
frost bitten feet.

No center is…
lethal.

As I walked on the sidewalk,

through the bird’s dominion,

on Summer street

towards Best,

I beheld a beautiful brilliance.

A strict opinion

that blinded me

like peering directly at the dwarf star,

Sirius. *

"parentheses" is a collection of poetry. It functions as an expression of complex emotions and ideas creatively using the power of words. This is the first volume, book 1, in the "precedence" series.
