Gat, my rock.

Without you,

it wouldn't mean a thing

Prologue

HER EYES FLICKERED AND flinched as the big biker laid me out across the pool table. His eyes widened as they fixed on the softness of my heaving breasts. With his forearm behind my knees, he lifted my red, stinging thighs and pushed them all the way up to my chest. My hands stretched out and grasped as he pressed down.

I shook and cried out as he slapped my ass. A grin spread wide across his thick, powerful lips and he plunged his mouth onto my swollen and sore lips.

I shuddered and as I shook and moistened, his tongue fanned me mercilessly. As I throbbed there, my body shook uncontrollably. He sucked on me. When I began to gush, he drank greedily. His long tongue probed and explored my soft opening relentlessly.

Waves of cascading vibration swelled to a gathering crest. My thighs, my stomach and my buttocks clenched and released. Tightened and relaxed. When my walls gripped around the snaking thrust of his tongue, my mouth sagged and his hand closed on my throat.

Chapter 1

THROUGH THE GRIMY GLASS, the gas station clerk could not have been less interested. He barely pulled his half-closed eyes from the screen. His bored voice crackled through a tinny speaker, "Your card's declined, Miss. Do you have another card that you want to use for payment?"

Bad news. Served up dry. Baked in the Nevada heat.

It had to be a mistake. I stepped away from the pay window and took out my phone to call Laurent. My call went straight to a machine voice that told me, 'There is no service on this number at present.'

Perfect. I was about to put it away when I saw that a text had come in. 'Your service has been terminated due to non-payment,' and a number to call. I called the number.

I got the machine again, telling me that there was no service.

Practically the middle of the desert, I had enough gas for about twenty miles and that was it. Eight dollars and forty cents in cash. I figured my best, safest option was to drive back to the block-long blur of strip mall that I passed through about six or seven miles back.

I remembered thinking as I drove through, Here's somewhere I'll never need to see more of. Aint it always the way? I was past and out the other side, back into dusty desert scrub before the thought had even finished. Now, I could end up having to walk there if the gas in my tank gave out.

I turned around and drove back. A post office in the middle of the strip doubled as a bus station. It was closed. Right next door was an empty diner with peeling paint the color of rust. With a sorry-looking grocery store by the gas station at the other end of the short strip and a couple of vacant storefronts, that seemed to be what there was, pretty much.

It must be a riot here on a Saturday night.

Chapter 2

DRIVING BACK FROM A visit to Tucson, my tiny denim skirt and a thin t-shirt with no bra was fine for driving. I hadn't expected to be out of the car any longer than it took to buy gas, why worry? That was way back when I still thought I could buy gas.

$8.40 in my purse, $1.08 in my checking account. All my credit cards suddenly maxed out and got cancelled. Out of gas and money and alone, stranded at an isolated strip mall in the middle of Nevada, all that I own is a thin tee-shirt, a tiny denim skirt that hardly covers my ass and a dead Honda.

A biker named Priest offers me the chance. All the hope that I have now is in a clubhouse bursting with hard, ruthless bikers. Men whose codes of honor could have me sold or traded in one beat of an anxious heart.

Hard choices and fast decisions are all the hope there is for desperate a girl stranded among hot-blooded bikers.
