Rays of light pierced the forest canopy. Dead leaves and cherry blossoms fell silently onto the glass coffin resting in the clearing. Inside, a girl lay between life and death. Her milky skin was punctuated by lips as red as freshly spilled blood; her dark hair crowned her face flowing freely as if she were underwater; her hands rested on her chest, a glowing red apple in their grip. As the Prince stepped into the clearing he shielded his eyes. The light reflected off the case blinding him. Drawing him like a beacon, he ran to the glass coffin. Feverishly, he swept the leaves aside, revealing her face. Pushing the lid to the side, it fell shattering. He touched her face, it was cold. Looking at her in this state was like seeing the clouds pass over the sun. There was a curse, but how to break it he thought. He'd come so far. It began on a late autumn day. The first snow of the season had fallen. The Prince and his father were visiting several of the lords in the kingdom. Their final tour brought them to Snow White's father's castle. The lord greeted them cheerily and showed them around the estate. As they were finishing their survey of the lands, they came across a huntsman. He was returning from the woods carrying a large set of antlers. "It must have been a fine stag," the Prince said, stopping the man. "Aye," he agreed gruffly. The huntsman adjusted a large bag he was carrying on his shoulder. The bag, full of fresh meat, was dripping blood into the snow. Three drops fell, red and glistening at the huntsman's feet. A chill went up the Prince's spine. "A fine kill," said a voice behind them. They turned to find a beautiful woman with long blonde hair and sharp blue eyes. She was riding a white steed and wearing a green flowing cape that seemed to pour over the horse. "Ah gentlemen, my wife," said the lord. The men bowed and she nodded to them reverentially. "My King you flatter me. A man of your stature should bow to no one." "I am but a servant to the beautiful women of my kingdom." the King replied. The lord's wife laughed and said, "Please, my King, gentlemen, I invite you all to my home." The men bowed appreciatively and followed the lord up the path to his manor. The huntsman lingered at the edge of the woods, watching them disappear through the gates. As the lady of the house came to the gate she hesitated, looking back to him. Even from far away he imagined he could see her mocking grin and cunning eyes. Readjusting the bag on his shoulder, he walked through the snow around the house and to the stables. Inside the hall, the men chattered merrily, rubbing their hands together and laughing to chase away the cold. Servants entered bearing wine. The men accepted it eagerly. The lady of the house paid special attention to every man, flirting and laughing as if each was unique and brilliant. It was not long before the focus of the room was on her. They complimented her and tried to impress her and basked in her approval, even the humble, virtuous Prince was guilty of enjoying her affection. Suddenly, a door was thrown open. A hush fell over the room as a young woman walked into the hall. She was clad in a light blue, floor-length dress with a tight bodice. Dark brown hair framed her heart shaped face and flowed down around her breasts. Her milky skin seemed to glow in the candle light of the hall. She glided into the room, stopping before the men. Curtseying, she stayed silent, deferential to the King and his men. "Please milady, rise," the King said. She stood and looked to the King shyly. The lord's wife forgotten, all of the men were enchanted by her. "This is my son," said the King, placing a hand on the Prince's shoulder. The Prince stared with his mouth open, unable to find the words. He was at once a captive to her beauty.

Playful at times, but always darkly erotic Snow White is re-imagined in this sexy fairy tale.
