She didn't want to be here anymore. Nate and Autumn had no chemistry it seemed, so there was no point of being here anyways.

PASSIONATE MINDS

Chapter 1

I still didn't know why, but Christian could easily do that to me. Just his presence sometimes put me on this sort of edge. Even though I liked him, it seemed like he could easily get on my bad side.

"I'm going to a dance," I said, trying to sound firm because I knew I would anger him with this information. "With Nate." He didn't react to my words. Instead, he just stared at me for another second. I stared back, waiting for his response.

"Why?" he simply asked, remaining expressionless. "Because I want to." I took a step towards him. "I want to go on a date with him because I find him cute." "Isn't that a bit shallow?" I rolled my eyes. "And because he's a nice guy. Don't worry Christian, nothing will happen if I date a guy like Nate." This time Christian rolled his eyes. "You don't even know him." "I would if you let me get to know him," I snapped. Christian sighed at that and he ran his fingers through his hair tiredly. When he looked back at me, his eyes looked at me as if I was that little kid he had given up on. That kid he knew lecturing would never help. Instead of getting angrier, I suddenly felt hurt by that. Hurt that he thought the same as my mom.

"Guys," Dee suddenly said. "Please don't tell me you guys are going to fight. It's not a pretty sight and I would rather leave." Christian sighed at that, his body sagging as he leaned back against my table. "No, I'll leave. Take care of Autumn, okay?" "I don't need to be taken care of!" I exclaimed, exasperated. Ignoring me, Christian stood up. Without looking at either of us, he then walked towards the door I stood beside. Unlike him, my eyes stuck to him.

"Wait, Christian," Dee suddenly said. "Why don't you come to the dance. As my date." Both Christian and I froze at those words. He turned around and my eyes flew to Dee, shocked. As she stood there, smiling boldly, I suddenly have the urge to slap her. After seeing what had gone down between the two of us, after all of the times I told her to back off from him, she didn't seem to listen me. Anger boiled in my veins.

To my horror, Christian replied, "Sure." "Really?" Dee asked, sounding just as shocked as I felt. "Yeah, it sounds fun." He shrugged. "What should I wear?" "Um." Dee broke out into a smile. "Just a dress shirt and pants. Even if you come dressed like a hobo, you'd still look better than the others." Internally, I gagged at that. I then watched as Christian's lip tugged up as he suppressed a smile. To my confusion, I suddenly felt sick. As if someone had punched me in the gut. "Okay, I'll get ready," he then simply said. He quickly left after that without even sparing me a glance. My eyes widened as I just looked down, wondering what the hell had happened. We had almost fought and then my best friend had asked him to be her date. To a dance where my date - who he hated - would attend. Anger was pumping through me at this point. Before I knew it, I slammed the door shut. My eyes then flew to Dee, who's eyes were now widened. I scowled at her. "What the hell was that?" I asked, throwing my hands up into the air in frustration. "What?" Dee asked, trying to look innocent despite that fact that her eyes looked bright with happiness.

If this had been another case, I would've been happy for her. Hell, I'd be celebrating with her. But in the situation we were in, I felt betrayed. "How many times did I tell you that you can't date him?" I hissed. "And really, after our near fight you ask him on a date. Do you even care about me?"

To my shock, Dee suddenly looked tired. She sighed and just like Christian, I knew she felt like she was dealing with a child. Both hurt and fury rose up to my throat. "Relax Autumn," Dee said. "You guys didn't even fight, and Christian is just looking out for you. That's such a stupid reason to fight." I felt like someone slapped me with those words. Fighting back any sort of expression, I decided to go back to my original reason of why I was so mad.

"That doesn't change the fact that you didn't listen to me," I said, noticing my anger sinking as hurt filled my chest in an almost physically painful way. "I told you a million times not to go after him." To my surprise, Dee's eyes teared up. She looked at me with her eyes looking sad, and suddenly my own feelings of anger and hurt vanished. Dee was always so happy. Seeing her like this was rare.

"When was the last time I went on a date?" she suddenly asked. "When was the last time I had someone to call mine?" I looked down as the pain in her eyes was evident. My last boyfriend had been two years ago, and hers was before that. It had been a long time. "You have a date," Dee continued, and I looked back up at her. "You can't just expect me to be the third wheel." I was speechless as she walked towards me. My throat felt constricted, and I knew that she had a point. Everyone hated being the third wheel. What she had asked for was beneficial to her. I should be happy for her. I should. When Dee reached me, she gently grabbed my arms. I stared at her, still speechless as she looked at me with her tear filled eyes. "Why is it such a bad thing for me to go on a date with Christian?" she asked. "What is your problem with it?" I had no response. Deep inside, I kept telling myself that I should be happy for her. That this was okay. But the other parts of me still felt hurt. For some crazy feeling, I felt betrayed by not only her, but by Christian. Shaking my head, I decided to push all this drama away. This pointless, heart-breaking drama. I had a date with Nate soon and I needed to make it a good one. Every time we tried to get closer there was always an issue, so I couldn't let this be one of them. Knowing his patience would eventually tire, I just had to suck up everything. Looking Dee in the eyes, I said seriously, "Fine. It's okay."

Her eyes brightened up and I wondered if she was actually sad in the first place. But before I could question it longer, Dee embraced me. She squealed and hugged me tightly, and I groaned. Deep inside I wasn't satisfied, but I knew this was the best option. I couldn't keep fighting with everyone. I glanced at Nate who was driving and frowned. Bringing my eyes away from him, I internally sighed as I realized he wasn't happy with the situation we were in. Lucky for him, I wasn't either.

Christian had gotten ready quickly in a blue shirt and black pants. I was caught off guard when I saw him because I rarely ever saw him dressed up, and because he never wore anything that wasn't black. Instead of commenting on those things though, I just ignored him and left to wait for Nate.

Nate soon came. Like a gentleman, he got out of his car and rang the doorbell. Since I had been waiting for him while Dee and Christian talked, I opened it quickly and commented on how great he looked. He did the same, saying that I looked hot.

Chapter 2

At that moment Christian stepped forward and asked him to refrain from using that word on his 'sister'. I rolled my eyes at that, and Nate's eyes widened as he realized Christian was coming with us. Being the bigger person, he then chose to ignore Christian - just like me. We all then went to Nate's car.

So there we were, on our way to the dance held at a hall. Nate and I hadn't said a word the entire time, but from where I sat in the passenger seat I could hear Christian and Dee talking. As I glanced up at the rear view mirror, I saw that Dee was doing most of the talking. She looked animated doing so, and Christian was listening attentively. After watching her for a bit, I noticed with a heavy heart that she looked really happy. We soon reached the hall and the four of us got out of the car. Nate quickly came to my side and I smiled at him. I hoped we would be able to talk inside, away from the two people I couldn't help but slightly resent after the events of today.

Suddenly leaning close to my ear, Nate whispered, "Your stepbrother isn't going to watch your every move today, is he?" "He better not," I muttered, glancing at Christian who still seemed to be listening to Dee attentively. "I'm so sick of his overprotectiveness." "Me too," he muttered. With that response, I knew Nate was getting tired. I didn't blame him at all because I was also tired. If Christian did anything to ruin my seemingly last chance with Nate, I knew I would never forgive him. "Shall we go?" Nate asked louder this time, moving away from me. I nodded. To my delight,

Nate then grabbed my hand. He smiled at me as I blushed lightly, and then lead me inside. Dee and Christian became a background noise at that.

Our hands were still holding each other's, but I now had to urge to let go of his sweaty hand. Not even because of its stickiness, but because I wanted to get away from Nate. Away from how awkward I felt. This date was not what I expected. What I had expected was for us to talk. To laugh and get to know each other. And while doing that, we'd be dancing until our ankles snapped. But instead of all that, we were standing off in a corner, holding hands without saying a word. That was the exact opposite of what I had wanted. I glanced at Nate, wondering how he wasn't dying of boredom. When I saw his face, I noticed he looked intrigued. Almost fascinated as he stared at the dance floor covered with sweaty teenagers. The very teenagers I wanted to join, but couldn't.

Seeing him so fascinated, I decided to look at the dance floor as well. I just needed something to get rid of my boredom. Something that wouldn't make me regret going on this date. Honestly, a part of me felt pretty shitty that I had gone through so much trouble for him. It wasn't worth it at this point.

As my eyes flew to the dance floor, I saw what I expected. Teenagers dancing their hearts out, laughing, and some public displays of affection that I quickly looked away from. I wasn't entertained yet, but seeing them have fun lightened my heart up a bit. Also made feel a bit jealous too, I had to admit. My eyes wandered around the dance floor for a bit more. Nothing caught my attention for a while, but soon my eyes widened as I saw a pair dancing their hearts out. Standing incredibly close to each other, they were laughing as they looked like they didn't have a care in the world. They were the replicas of what Nate and I were supposed to be today.

As the girl threw her head back, I realized in shock that the girl was Dee. At that very moment, my eyes widened and my heart sunk. Without giving Dee a second glance, my eyes flew to the boy that happened to be Christian.

With my eyes still wide, I stared at Christian. I watched him laugh with his eyes as bright as ever. Right now, he looked incredibly happy, happier than I'd ever seen him. And for some reason, I felt like I got punched in the stomach from that. *
