Introduction

Welcome to this self-study course on Writing Books for Children. It has been carefully designed to provide writers of all levels an in-depth look at the techniques and processes required to be able to create a book worthy of publication in this interesting niche. It is written in a structured way from idea creation to publishing options and provides all the information you need to take your first steps into the creative world of children's fiction.

Many people believe that writing books for children is an 'easier option' than writing for the adult market, certainly there is a lesser word count than when writing full-length adult fiction however, it's vital that you can step into mind-set of the child and weave a compelling tale that will catch the imagination of the reader.

As we grow up, we tend to forget about all the magic and the excitement of life itself. We also forget that the proverbial line between fantasy and reality is blurred when seen through the eyes of a child. We lose sight of the wonders available to us in life as the years tick by, more concerned with the practicalities of day to day living.

Would-be authors often find themselves talking down to children, which is easily detectable by the readers. They believe they understand what children should be learning and concentrate on telling stories through this perspective rather than revealing a storybook world which engages while still covering the principles of interest. *
