Battle for Independence — Won!

When Chris Layo of Norfolk, New York embarked on a personal journey battling for disability rights, he didn’t realize the precedent he would set for those coming after him.

Chris is an intelligent college student who lives with Duchene’s Muscular Dystrophy and requires care 24 hours per day. He had been relatively independent though his empowered Consumer Directed Personal Assistance Program (CDPAP). He was able to hire his own aides, who provided him such services as personal care, nursing care and transportation. He was able to shop for his own groceries, socialize and meet his entertainment needs, using the customized van that he owns, driven by an aide.

In early 2008, Chris was informed by the St. Lawrence County Department of Social Services that he could no longer be transported by the aides he hired through CDPAP. Chris says, continues on page 7

Celebrating Pro Bono

Dear Friends:

I’m delighted to report that the Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York celebrated pro bono during National Celebrate Pro Bono Week the last week of October throughout northeastern New York. The kick-off celebration at the Court of Appeals on Friday, October 23 featured remarks from the Honorable Jonathan Lippman, Stephen Younger, President-Elect of the New York State Bar Association, David Miranda, President of the Albany County Bar Association, Dan Hurteau of Nixon Peabody, an ardent PAI volunteer, and Dorothea Medina, a client of The Legal Project. Each and every speaker was superb.

It was heartening to hear Judge Lippman and others call for recognition of the $15 million needed to “bail out” the IOLA Fund for 2010. Only with an infusion of funds can the IOLA Fund maintain support for legal services programs in the Capital District and throughout New York State. And Dan Hurteau’s Top 11 reasons to do pro bono can be found later in this newsletter.

The week that followed was terrific. The Legal Aid Society and the Albany County Bar Association staffed clinics open to the public offering free consultations with bankruptcy attorneys (Guy Criscione, Christian Dribush, Martin Mooney and Scott Dillon). The Albany County Bar Association volunteers (James Barnes, Paul Czech and Laura Hoffman) provided free advice on wills and estate planning. In Canton, the St. Lawrence County Bar Association worked with Legal Aid to offer free Ask-A-Lawyer Clinics at the local courthouse. Jondavid DeLong and Jerry Leek volunteered.

We finished the week with a wonderful celebration hosted by the Schenectady County judiciary and the Schenectady County Bar Association, honoring Legal Aid Society Board member Ellie DeCoursey and former Legal Aid Society Board President, Peter Coffey, for their stalwart pro bono efforts.

Thanks to the New York State Bar Association, the Honorable George Ceresia, the Honorable Vito Caruso, Regina Trefilletti, Erika Hanks and Joanne Haelen for making our programs possible. This week highlighted the importance of pro bono services to our clients and communities. If you haven’t done a pro bono case in the last year, please call me at 518-689-6304 or shoot me an email at lmoy@lasnny.org to let me know what type of case you would like us to receive some stimulus funding, we rely on you to build our annual Justice For All Campaign so that the provision of civil legal services will not vary according to government funding or a downturn in the economy. I know that this is a challenging year to come.

Best wishes to you and yours for the year to come.

Top 11 Reasons To Do Pro Bono

11. Professional and Ethical Obligation — as licensed professionals we all have an obligation to serve those in our communities that are underserved and underprivileged.

10. Improves Job Satisfaction — all involved in the practice of law, staff, paralegals and lawyers alike, want to feel that they are part of something more than just doing a job. Pro Bono provides the opportunity to give back, do more and get involved outside our small windows on the world.

9. Improves Recruitment — motivated young lawyers and laterals are looking for law firms and places of employment that “do the right things” both in the office and community.

8. Improves Retention — see job satisfaction — people like to work in an environment where they feel the organization is not only doing great work but doing great things in the community. Happy people stay.

7. Great Training — for all, pro bono offers opportunities and experiences clients simply do not want to pay for. From gaining confidence in client relations all the way to trying a case, the training is invaluable.

6. CLE — many referral sources, for example The Legal Aid Society of Northeast, New York, are qualified CLE providers and a percentage of your pro bono work is given CLE credit.

5. Resume Builder — a great way to learn and get hands on client and even trial experience with new areas of the law, that can fill holes in the resume and expand new areas of practice.

4. Great Publicity — so much bad press is directed at the legal profession, that it is refreshing to see attorneys out in the community helping others and getting recognized for the positives.

3. Visibility — whether you want recognition or not — our peers, neighbors and friends do see the good that we do through pro bono.

2. Good for Business — more and more clients and prospective clients are asking and making hire decisions based on commitment of attorneys to pro bono and community investment. Several important local and national rankings of law firms include as a component the firm commitment (based on hours per attorney) to pro bono.

1. It Just Feels Good — nothing is better than the feeling of doing something that you know and see helps people in a very real and positive manner.

Horses, Carpentry…and Public Service

While some people have career aspirations that lead directly to a certain profession, Nicholas Pignone took a more circuitous route. In his late teens, Nicholas became a farrier (a specialist in equine hoof care) for several years in the Berkshires. He says he “went to law school later in life,” attending law school at Queens College of the City University of New York (CUNY). After graduation in 2004, he says he “didn’t take the Bar right away.” Instead, Nicholas says he “did some carpentry work, building set designs,” while employed by Ralph Lauren. After taking the exam in early 2005, he went to work in the Public Defender’s office in Bethel, Alaska. After receiving word that he had passed the exam, he and his wife decided to “put down roots” in St. Lawrence County, where they now live with their two children. Upon arrival, he again worked as a Public Defender.

After working in St. Lawrence County for ten months, Vern Ingram suggested that he had space in his office for Nicholas to establish his own practice. Thirteen months later, Vern indicated that he would be interested in “partnering at that point, which was October of 2008,” says Nicholas. Their practice, Ingram & Pignone Law Firm, is located in Potsdam.

While specializing in “mostly family law and criminal law,” Nicholas has maintained an interest in the “rewarding work” of immigration rights harkening back to his time as an intern for the CUNY School of Law’s Immigrant and Refugee Rights Clinic. In St. Lawrence County, he says, sometimes domestic violence issues and immigration issues collide when a “mail order bride” seeks help from the legal system.

Nicholas was approached by Dick Gardner about becoming a member of the LASNNY Board of Directors in the fall of 2008, around the same time he became a partner at his current firm. Similar to his interest in assisting immigrants, Nicholas finds the association with LASNNY in keeping with his desire to be involved in public service.

“At first it was like my whole life was over.” Living in a rural area, he had few options for transportation outside of his Medicaid provided transportation to medical appointments and the transportation provided by VESID to get him to and from his college classes at the State University of New York at Potsdam. Suddenly, his aides “…weren’t allowed [to drive him anywhere] even though it was written in their contracts,” he explains. Chris got some good advice from a college professor who said, “Don’t take no for an answer.” This professor “showed me how to fight your way through [self-advocacy],” Chris recalls.

Through some online research, Chris contacted Sim Goldman, Senior Attorney, Disability Advocates, Inc. in Albany, who recounts, “He had an issue that had been bubbling up for some time…it cried out for relief.” This is a man who “despite his Muscular Dystrophy is trying to live a full life.” Further, Sim felt that there is “nothing in Federal law that prohibits [aides] from driving.”

With this support, a legal team began to form. The Legal Aid Society of Northeastern New York (LASNNY) and Disability Advocates, Inc. are both part of the state Protection and Advocacy (“P&A”) network, which receives federal funding to represent those with developmental disabilities. The P&A attorneys from both programs already knew each other, since they collaborate regularly at statewide conferences and on bi-monthly conference calls. So when Chris needed local counsel, it was natural for Sim to reach out to the P&A attorney in LASNNY’s Canton office, Cynthia A. Eyler. In addition, Chris was referred to LASNNY’s Canton office by his local counselor, who also was familiar with LASNNY’s Canton office. Cynthia says that there was no clear answer in law or regulation for the question Chris posed; only local policies forbade personal care aides to drive their employers, while on duty caring for them. The issue was ripe for interpretation at a New York State Fair Hearing. Cynthia maintained at the Fair Hearing that removing Chris’s non-medical transportation violated the purpose of the CDPAP outlined in Social Services Law, the integration mandate of Title II of the Americans with Disabilities Act of 1990, and violated section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act. The administrative law judge did not rule in Chris’s favor. Therefore, Cynthia filed an appeal in St. Lawrence County Supreme Court about a week before Christmas, 2008.

A few days later, the New York State Department of Health issued a General Information Systems message allowing Medicaid funding for Personal Care Assistants to transport their employers while they are providing care. Chris got a call from Sim Goldman on Christmas Eve. Chris says, the message was, “if you need to get any Christmas presents, go and do it.”

In October 2009, Chris, Cynthia, and Sim were honored for their success on this issue, along with attorneys from the New York State Department of Mental Hygiene and the New York State Department of Health, by the Consumer Directed Personal Assistance Association of New York State, at their Annual Conference in Saratoga Springs. Chris was able to attend, with several of his personal care aides, who drove him nearly four hours each way to be there.

A year after Chris’s case, he reflects that the struggle was “eye opening” and made him, “realize that the rights I had could be taken away at any moment.” But, he also says that, “in a way, it makes me a stronger person…I want to try to make things better [for other people in his situation]. My uncle had the same condition. He only lived to 18 and he never had the chances I did. I wouldn’t want to be in the situation that he was in.” Now, Chris wants to fight for others. As a junior studying communications and creative writing, Chris aspires to become a public speaker after he graduates, so that he can tell his story and inspire others.
