Hi laurel!
It seems that I will have to withdraw my support for the founder of wikileaks, as I don't want to be charged with breaking a condom - although, I assume that they would have to prove intent - unless they decided to try me by military tribunal.
The leaks won't actually bring harm to the country, of course, but rather, will bring an end to the careers of more than a few public officials.
Spymaster hillary probably won't get the boot however - I hear that she has some pretty serious connections.
Of course, loose lips do sink ships - but, are talking about the titanic, or the hindenburg?
So, to paraphrase the man who apparently is our current president; I did not have internet relations with that man - julian assange.
Take care, michael

Patterson-Carver is a self-taught artist, born in Chicago in 1958, and currently living in Northern California. Inspired by childhood exposure to the civil rights movement, he has been a lifelong activist and considers himself a political refugee. In the past two years, Patterson-Carver has exhibited widely, including solo exhibitions at Timothy Taylor Gallery, London; Galerie Laurent Godin, Paris; Sorry We're Closed, Brussels; and White Columns, New York. His work is included in the public collections of the American Folk Art Museum, New York; the City of Paris Permanent Collection; FRAC Bretagne, Châteaugiron, France; and the Museum of Everything, London. A monograph of his work was recently published by Four Corners Books in London, and the US launch of the publication will take place at White Columns on March 5, 2011. This is his second solo exhibition at the gallery.

The gallery is open from Wednesday to Sunday, 11-6. Please contact the gallery for further information or images.
