

News Story Summary

The Ainsworth Restaurant partnered with chef Jonathan Cheban to create 24K Gold Chicken Wings. The item is available at two of the restaurant's New York City locations. The food item is described as being gold-dusted, 24-hour brined, gold coconut butter-chipotle honey, (and) gourmet bleu cheese. The 24K wings can be purchased in orders of 10, 20, and 50, with the order of 10 costing $45. Brian Mazza, the owner of the restaurants, stated that they added the menu item because they wanted to create a never before done item that no one had ever seen or tasted.

(For more on this story, search the Internet using the term "24K Chicken Wings".)

Focus Attention

To replace the illustration activity under Focus Attention, share about news story about the chicken wings being served coated with 24K gold dust. Conduct a poll, asking group members if they would try one of the wings if given the opportunity. Lead the group to discuss why some may be intrigued by the menu item. Ask: What makes this food item tempting? Why might a person pay for the opportunity to eat this item? Emphasize responses that point to trying something new or different. Highlight how the promise of a new experience can be found behind many temptations. Complete the step as written by asking the group to discuss the most common weaknesses or temptations faced by believers. Point out any identified that include the promise of a new experience.

Challenge

To begin the Summarize and Challenge suggestion, remind the group of the news story about the 24K gold chicken wings. Ask: What would be the test this food item would need to pass to be considered a success? After allowing the group to share, ask: For the believer, what would the test he or she would need to pass to be considered a success? Complete the step as written, reviewing the statements printed under Apply the Text.