Listenwise Launches New Podcast, Talk Sup
Elevating Superintendents' voices in a podcast

Boston, MA (May 3, 2018) Listenwise, a listening skills building company, today announced that they released a new podcast, Talk Sup. Talk Sup highlights Superintendents from school districts across the U.S. and connects them to their communities by listening to their priorities, challenges, and motivations. Talk Sup is a thought-leadership podcast that offers a personal glimpse inside educational decision-making.

Listenwise is an award-winning listening skills company for middle and high schools. In addition to building the listening skills of students for academic success, Listenwise seeks to elevate the voices of thought leaders in education through this podcast. Listenwise's deep experience in producing compelling audio stories will elevate the issues and voices of district leaders. The podcast is hosted by Listenwise CEO and Founder, Monica Brady-Myerov, an award-winning public radio reporter with more than 20 years of reporting experience.

Each 10 minute episode offers a insightful look into one Superintendent's thoughts and personal motivations. The first episode features the San Diego County Superintendent of Schools, Paul Gothold, who says he's in the business of people. The second episode features the Superintendent of the Covina-Valley Unified School District, Dr. Richard M. Sheehan who says he stays in touch with students and teachers by visiting every classroom in the districts at least four times a year.

"It's important to for educators and the community to hear their superintendent's motivations, challenges and personal stories. This podcast gives superintendents the opportunity to get personal and share what drives them to help students succeed." said Talk Sup host and Listenwise Founder and CEO, Monica Brady-Myerov.
