

Janet Jacobson

In 1974 after their graduation from the University of North Dakota and a few years of teaching, Terry and Janet Jacobson returned to the farm originally farmed by Janet's maternal grandparents. Their highly diversified farm has been continuously certified as organic since 1979. Janet raised sheep for more years than she can remember and is a partner in a wool processing company, the North Dakota Woolly Girls.

The Jacobson's are founding members of the forty-year old Northern Plains Sustainable Agriculture Society. They have each served as a board member and as NPSAS president advocating on behalf of the region's organic farmers and consumers, local food producers and others seeking sustainability.

Terry and Janet are active members of United Lutheran Church in Langdon.
