Where Does Your True Identity Lie?

SHARE: Tim Keller noted in the sermon, if you are successful at work it goes to your head, and if you fail it goes to your heart. How can you practically shift your mindset so that your primary identity is firmly rooted as a child of God rather than defined by your job title or paycheck? Reflect on a recent success or failure at work and examine how it influenced your self-worth.

God Works
READ: Genesis 2:2-3, 15. When you think about God working… what do you imagine him doing? Why do you think God intended us to work? What is the purpose of our work?

Transforming Daily Tasks into Worship
READ: Colossians 3:22-24 This passage urges believers to work at whatever they do with all their heart, as working for the Lord rather than human masters. In what specific ways can you view your everyday Monday-through-Friday tasks as an act of worship to God? Discuss practical steps to integrate your faith into your daily job responsibilities without separating your spiritual life from your career.

Your Workplace as a Mission Field
READ: 1 Thessalonians 4:11-12, Matthew 5:14-16. The sermon emphasizes that your workplace is your mission field and that your attitude should point people toward Jesus, much like Joseph's integrity did in Potiphar's house and in prison. How does the quality of your work, your handling of difficult circumstances, and your interaction with colleagues currently serve as a witness for Christ? Identify one practical way you can let your light shine more brightly among your coworkers this week.

Honoring Leaders and Caring for Employees
READ Ephesians 6:5-9. Scripture calls employees to honor and respect their leaders, and bosses to treat their staff fairly, keeping in mind that we ultimately serve a Master in heaven. How can you intentionally pray for and show respect to a difficult boss, or if you are in a leadership position, how can you better care for and value those you manage?
