BLIND PITILESS INDIFFERENCE

The world's most famous atheist put this quote in his book railing against God. Imagine the best he can say is that life is blind pitiless indifference. What a sad analogy of meaninglessness. God's rebuttal:

blind: Without God we really are blind to eternal things, our life seems cruel so few years so full of trouble with a grave as a reward. But because of God we see, we see eternity, heaven, we see purpose, our hope is secure. Paul said Satan has blinded people and they live in darkness.

Pitiless: Interesting choice of words from the atheist. Without eternity, without ultimate judgment, without heaven and hell, this existence does seem cruel and pitiless. So many have adopted the Epicureans view "eat drink and be merry for tomorrow we die".

Indifference: Without God not only is life blind and pitiless but also indifferent. It doesn't matter why one lives and, but the other one dies it's all a crap shoot anyway. No morality, no reasoning, no purpose.

How contrary to God this is. He gives us hope and help, he offers a future and ceaseless joy through all of eternity.

Thank God for Jesus,
