Having All of the Pieces

One of the easiest mistakes we make is confusing what we know with all there is to know. We see someone make a decision and assume we understand why. We hear one side of a disagreement and decide who was right. Someone responds differently than we expected, and before long we've constructed an explanation for what must be going on.

Sometimes we may even be right. But sometimes we're working with three pieces of a ten-piece puzzle. Sometimes we are terribly wrong, and our assessment and evaluation totally miss the mark.

Almost always, more is happening in another person's life than we can see. There are conversations we weren't part of, experiences we don't know about, fears and concerns they haven't expressed, and circumstances/events that may completely change how we would understand their actions or behavior. That doesn't mean we should never make judgments. Life requires us to make decisions based on the information available to us. It simply means we should hold some of our conclusions with humility.

Scripture repeatedly reminds us that our perspective is limited (Isa.55:8-9 being the foremost example of this). We see what is happening in front of us. However, God sees what came before it, what is happening behind it, and what may yet come from it. That should leave a little room in our assumptions. A little room for another explanation. A little room for someone to surprise us. And perhaps most importantly, a little room for God to be doing something we simply haven't seen yet.
