the Gorton Report

Stacy and Holly Gorton with

the God that Kyle Worships

When you meet Kyle you are immediately warmed with his smile. He joined Cru full-time this summer and will move to Salt Lake City to help reach lost college students for Christ as soon as he has enough funds developed. I get the privilege of being his coach through this process and I am motivated to get him on campus after he told me this story.

At the University of Washington he was helping freshman students move into their dorms as they arrived to college. He was also collecting spiritual surveys from the Freshman with a chance for them to share more about their answers at a later time. One student who wanted to talk further was Andy. Kyle met with him a few days later and asked to hear his story. Because of Kyle's disarming nature, Andy felt safe enough in that first conversation to share that he was openly gay.

Prayer & Praise

—That Kyle would find all his ministry partners soon.

—Andy would come to know Jesus.

—Pray our children have soft hearts toward Jesus.

—Our marriage would continue to flourish.

Kyles responded, "I feel honored that you would feel safe enough to share that with me. Thank you." Kyle went on to share his own experience growing up on a farm and how Christ has impacted his life. The thing that really stuck with Kyle was when Andy said, "You know Kyle, this is the first conversation I have had with a Christian that didn't end in yelling". Kyle was saddened that that was Andy's experience with Christians but also hopeful that Andy might think, "Maybe the God that Kyle worships might be a God who could care for me as well."
