MINISTER'S MESSAGE

Hello Beloveds,

Our Pumpkin Patch is going strong and we had a wonderful crew of volunteers on Saturday to unload the truck with our last delivery. We want to thank all who were involved for their eagerness and commitment to support UUCCN.

I want to remind everyone that early voting is coming up very soon. It begins on Saturday in my area and I look forward to participating. I encourage you to vote early if possible and let your voice be heard. There are many issues affecting us today and our Fifth Principle encourages our participation in the democratic process.

On Monday evening I joined the zoom meeting with the Long Island Advocates for Police Accountability. The robust discussions covered recent ICE raids, the memorial being held for Santos Benegas Reyes and others who have died in detention centers. A service will take place on November 1st at 3:00 in Hempstead. We also discussed strategies in preparation for the upcoming election. Attached in this Weekly Update are flyers for events on voting. Please read and share this information with your friends and relatives.

I am looking forward to seeing you on Sunday for our service on The Wisdom of Wise Women. This is to support and celebrate women of a certain age and those who love them.

Please bring a quote, poem or short reading that encourages and sustains you. We will pray for those who have gone on to be ancestors. You might bring their photo as well. Bring a friend with you and let us celebrate each other.

If you are available on Monday evenings to attend the zoom meeting for LIAPA, the link is provided below.

Immigration Update

Dear UUCN,

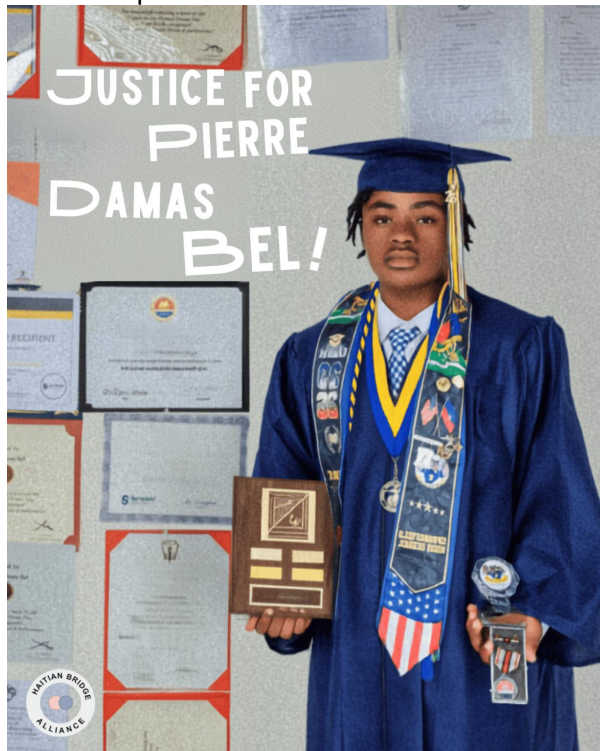

We will be sharing pertinent information regarding immigration on a regular basis. Much is taking place that we as a congregation working for justice, should know about.

Last February, our congregation sponsored a Share the Plate program for a Catholic Church in Haiti that was providing support to the population due to the effects of Hurricane Melissa. The arrangement was made to send the funds to the church but their website and any internet access was compromised.

I have been working with my colleague, Deacon Berthin Eduoard to find a suitable replacement. Given the recent actions of this government's administration to end the Temporary Protected Status of Haitian people, we will be sending the Share the Plate donations to Haitian Bridge Alliance, tps. They provide community services and legal resources to support the Haitian community. Presently there are 350,000 Haitian people who have lost protections under recent legislation.

The situation is dire; on the first of this month, a twenty year old honor student, Pierre Damas Bel , newly enrolled in Wright State University, Ohio, took his own life when he was forced to wear an ankle monitor. He was no longer allowed to play soccer, which he had excelled in. He had contacted ICE to have the monitor removed, to no avail. Overtime he became despondent. His college scholarships and freedoms were stripped away. He called his father to say that he was not feeling right. He expressed his despair. His father encouraged him to return home so that they could talk. He never made it home. He parked his car on the side of the road and walked into traffic.

“I came to this country to pursue my education. I didn’t come here to commit a crime or hurt anyone. Yet now I’m walking through the streets of the United States with a GPS monitor on my leg, carrying a feeling of shame and humiliation that I never imagined I would experience.”

— Pierre Damas Bel.

More than 350,000 Haitians are facing deportation after the Supreme Court ruled with the Trump Administration to end Temporary Protected Status (TPS), which is a legal status they have had for over a decade.

Helpful Strategies for Dealing with Members of Hate Groups

Dear UCCN,

I found this information from my friend and colleague, Rev. Kate Lore. Please take the time to read it and reflect on it as it is helpful for addressing the frustration many are experiencing.

How To Deal With Members of Hate Groups: (this is the 2nd of 2 posts on Hate Groups. The prior post deals with WHY people join Hate Groups).

1) PROTECT THOSE WHO ARE TARGETED. The first priority is always the safety of people threatened by hate. That means:

- * Enforcing laws against violence, harassment, and intimidation.
- * Protecting vulnerable communities.
- * Challenging hate speech when it incites violence or dehumanizes others.
- * Strengthening democratic institutions and the rule of law.

Compassion for individuals should never come at the expense of the safety of those they target.

2) SEPARATE THE PERSON FROM THE IDEOLOGY. Many people who have left hate groups say that what helped them change was encountering people who refused to reduce them to their worst beliefs while also refusing to excuse those beliefs.

This is different from tolerating hate. It means holding two ideas together:

- * Every person has the capacity to change.
- * Harmful beliefs and actions must be confronted.

3) DON'T EXPECT FACTS ALONE TO CHANGE MINDS. Research consistently shows that simply presenting more evidence rarely changes deeply held extremist beliefs.

People are more likely to change when:

- * Someone they trust asks genuine questions.
- * They experience contradictions between the movement's promises and reality.
- * They develop meaningful relationships outside the group.

4) REDUCE ISOLATION. Former extremists often describe leaving as incredibly lonely.

Organizations that help people disengage from hate groups focus on helping them build:

- * New friendships.
- * Employment.
- * Purpose.
- * A sense of identity beyond the movement.

Without alternatives, people often return to the only community they know.

5) HOLD LEADERS ACCOUNTABLE. There is an important distinction between:

- * Someone struggling to leave an extremist ideology.
- * Someone recruiting others, organizing violence, or profiting from hate.

The latter requires accountability through legal and civic institutions.

WHAT PEOPLE WHO LEFT HATE GROUPS OFTEN SAY: Former members of extremist organizations frequently describe a similar pattern:

- * They were welcomed before they were indoctrinated.
- * They found identity and purpose.
- * Over time, the ideology became more extreme.
- * What finally broke through was often an unexpected act of kindness or a relationship that challenged their assumptions—not because kindness erased accountability, but because it made a different identity imaginable.

Please note: I know this work isn't for everybody. But as Dr. King once said, resisting injustice and loving the person committing it were not opposites. He believed people should resist systems of oppression vigorously while leaving open the possibility of personal transformation. I agree.

Religious Education

RE Session Summary – October 18, 2026

Our lesson continued October's Soul Matters theme of Courage, with a focus on "Being Courageous About What We Believe." We explored what it means to stand up for our beliefs while remaining open to different perspectives, listening respectfully, and recognizing that changing our minds can sometimes be an act of courage.

We began with a brief reminder about respecting our shared spaces and belongings at UUCN, emphasizing that our values are reflected not only in how we treat one another but also in how we care for our community.

Following our chalice lighting, we explored the idea of an “inner compass”—the conscience, beliefs, and values that help guide our decisions. Students considered whether our inner compasses are always right, what happens when people hold conflicting beliefs, and how listening and learning can help us make thoughtful choices.

Next, we participated in Courage Choice, an interactive movement activity that encouraged students to make decisions about different scenarios involving courage, respect, and personal beliefs. Students moved between two areas of the room depending on whether they considered a particular action courageous and respectful or believed it required more courage or care. They were encouraged to explain their reasoning, consider different perspectives, and recognize that changing one's position after hearing another viewpoint can be a positive thing.

We expanded the activity by inviting students to create their own scenarios for the group to consider, allowing them to take a more active role in guiding the discussion. I participated in responding to their scenarios, reinforcing that everyone, including adults, can learn from different perspectives.

For our final activity, students created their own Courage Compasses, using words, drawings, and symbols to represent four aspects of their lives: what they believe, the values that guide them, the people or experiences that influence them, and how they hope to act courageously. This creative exercise gave students an opportunity to reflect on their individual values and how those values can shape their choices.

Throughout the session, we emphasized the Unitarian Universalist value of Pluralism, recognizing that people bring different beliefs, experiences, and perspectives to our communities. We discussed how standing up for what we believe does not require everyone else to agree with us, and how we can remain respectful while thinking critically and asking questions.

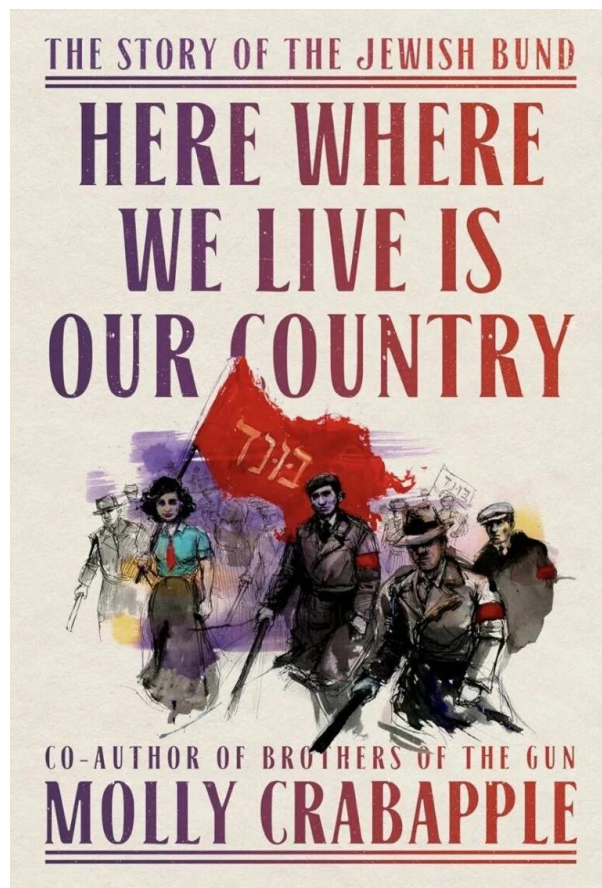

We concluded with our chalice extinguishing, encouraging students to carry the lessons of courage, respect, and open-mindedness into the coming week.

It was especially encouraging to have another student join us, and we were able to complete all the planned activities. The session offered a meaningful combination of movement, discussion, creativity, and reflection, with opportunities for students of different ages to participate.

Warmly,
Ashley
