Recently, I had foot surgery that has kept me more sidelined than I prefer. If you know me, you know sitting still is not exactly one of my spiritual gifts. I like to be up, moving, going, doing. So being told to slow down, prop up my foot, and rest has been a challenge. But as often happens, the Lord has used this unexpected season to remind me of something important.

Sometimes God allows circumstances in our lives that gently (or not so gently) compel us to be still. An injury, a schedule change, a closed door, or an unexpected pause can frustrate us at first. We may feel unproductive or out of rhythm. Yet it's often in those quiet, slower moments that we hear Him more clearly.

Psalm 46:10 says, Be still, and know that I am God. Being still doesn't come naturally to many of us. We tend to equate busyness with faithfulness. But God does not need our constant motion nearly as much as He desires our attention and trust.

This temporary season on the sidelines has reminded me that the world keeps turning, the church keeps moving, and God keeps working—even when I'm forced to sit with my foot elevated. And maybe that's part of the lesson: He is God, and we can rest in that.

If you find yourself in an unexpected pause right now, maybe it's not just an interruption. Maybe it's an invitation to slow down, refocus, and remember what matters most.

Now, if you'll excuse me, I think my foot is telling me it's time to sit down again.
