What if I have a question or concern after office hours?

We are on call 24/7 during overnight camps. You can call the office anytime and leave a message and someone will get back to you as soon as possible. You may also email Britney@seekerssprings.com anytime.

What if my child gets sick at camp? What if my child has medications that need to be taken at camp?

We have a licensed nurse practitioner on call during all camps. If your child gets sick or is not feeling well, the nurse or camp staff will contact you. All medicines must be turned in to the camp nurse on the first day of camp. She will oversee distribution of medicines to assure correct doses are given at the correct times. The camp nurse will be available at check-in on the first day of camp to discuss any medical needs your child may have while at camp.

What if my child gets homesick?

We understand that the first day or two at camp can be difficult for both the child and the parents, especially if it is your child's first time at camp.

Homesickness (though we very rarely experience real homesickness) usually stems from being in a new environment and being unsure of what will happen. This is a temporary situation and clears up as soon as your child discovers the excitement of camp activities. The best preparation for homesickness is a positive family attitude about camp, discussion about what to expect, and gentle encouragement that missing home is "ok". Please do not tell your child that if they get homesick, you will come and get them. This invariably sets the child up for failure, if they know this "out" is available to them. This preparation beforehand will usually suffice to give your child the tools needed to make the camp transition a valuable growth experience.

What type of rules and regulations do you have? How are staff trained to handle discipline situations?

We try to have as few rules as possible at camp, holding fast to the idea that if we accentuate the positive, we'll eliminate the negative. However, the absolute safety of each camper must be assured within an environment that is wholesome and Christian. Our staff are trained to deal with discipline situations and view discipline as a teaching opportunity that is to be done out of love, not punishment. If a staff member is not able to correct and redirect then our lead staff will step in to assist. If a child's behavior continues to be an issue, parents will be contacted and camper may be asked to leave camp.

Is it okay if my child brings a cell phone just in case?

We have a "no-cell phone" policy at camp for our campers. Cell phones are expensive and can get lost or stolen. The physical camp environment is not friendly to such devices. There is also a fundamental problem with children having cell phones at camp, and that is trust. When children come to camp they and you are making a leap of faith by transferring their primary care from you, as their parents to us and our camp staff. As children learn to trust other caring adults, they grow and learn, little by little, to solve some of their own challenges. This is one of the many benefits of a camp experience. It is one important way for your children to learn to become resilient. Contacting you by phone essentially means they have not made this transition. It keeps us from getting to problems that may arise and addressing them quickly.

Sending a cell phone to camp is like saying to your child that you as the parent have not truly come to peace with the notion of them being in our care. We agree to let you know if your child is experiencing a challenge in their adjustment to camp and are willing to let them call home if we think it is necessary. You can help by talking with your child before they leave for camp, and telling them that there is always someone they can reach out to, whether it is their group leader, one of our lead staff, or even the camp director. We are all here to help, but if you don't trust us, your children certainly won't. Thank you for your understanding of this policy.
