Allen is an author, educator, and historian. After receiving his master's degree in chemical engineering from MIT, he began his 40 year career in the oil and gas industry. As an adjunct professor he has taught at UTD, SMU, and TWU. He has written several books, and maintains a Civil War web site "Civil War Journeys" and writes a blog on the Civil War, entitled "Salient Points."

His newest book explores the 16 Commandants of Cadets at the U.S. Military Academy who played an important role in training the officers who would serve as senior commanders in both Union and Confederate armies. "Preparing for Disunion" presents the biographies, and significant contributions to the military instruction, and notable cadets they trained while at West Point.
