

This week
the Spotlight is on
Phil Farman

After 34 years in law enforcement (28 behind the wheel as a Highway Patrolman), Phil has recently retired. As a retiree, he is now able to grow out his 'officer' haircut.

Ever since he was a kid, Phil wanted to be in law enforcement. An early predilection of his, a desire to stand back and quietly observe rather than putting himself forward, may have been a harbinger of his later career in law enforcement. He has always enjoyed working with the public and helping wherever and in whatever way he can.

Phil says that his interest in religion, God, and all things spiritual began with his mother, who always took him to church as a child. As an Elder, Phil has served on many commissions at FPC. But his service to the church has also extended to taking a turn in the sound booth, serving coffee and cookies in the Fellowship Hall, and wielding a paint brush in the Education Wing.

Now that he's retired, Phil and wife Peggy plan to spend more time traveling. Of course to visit the kids ("they might get tired of us, but we never get tired of seeing them"), an excursion to New England, and, well, get him aside and ask him what other extraordinary adventures or projects they might have dreamed up.

Also, with more time on his hands, Phil will now be able to spend a lot more time messing with computers and doing all those things around the house he's been wanting to do but always lacked time for. (And we can't help but think that Peggy may have a helpful suggestion or two.)

FPC is grateful for Phil's cheerful presence in our church community, and we wish him a rich and contented retirement.
