

Scripture Readings for Shabbat and Holidays

This appendix, which relates to Section XV of the Introduction, lists the parashot-hashavua (the Scripture readings from the Torah and the Prophets read each week in the synagogue on Shabbat) and the Scripture readings for the Jewish holidays. In the tables that follow, “A” and “S” refer to Ashkenazic and Sefardic customary readings, respectively, where these differ. “M” means “suggested Messianic adaptation.” The B’rit Hadashah readings are suggestions only and often include more material than most congregations will wish to use on any particular occasion. The abbreviations for B’rit Hadashah books are given at the bottom of page 1556.

There are 54 parashot-hashavua to allow for readings on 54 Shabbats – which can happen during a Jewish leap year, since a leap year adds a thirteenth lunar month to the calendar. Regular years, those with twelve months, have fewer Shabbats, so that in some weeks two parashot are read. The table below indicates these with “RY.” On the holiday called Simchat Torah, which usually falls in October, there is a reading from the end of Deuteronomy (parashah #54); then the Torah scroll is rewound, and the reading continues from Genesis 1:1 (parashah #1). In other words, the cycle takes a year, ending and beginning on Simchat Torah (which means, literally, “joy of the Torah”), and continuing parashah by parashah each week until the next year’s Simchat Torah.

The special readings from the Torah and the Prophets for the Jewish holidays are arranged chronologically according to the Jewish calendar, which begins with Rosh HaShanah (the Jewish New Year) in September or early October. The readings are those used in the Diaspora, where some Jewish holidays are celebrated for an extra day beyond what is specified in the Bible (and observed in Israel), because of uncertainty about the calendar in earlier times. (Determination of the new month required that the crescent moon actually be seen in the west from Jerusalem, and whether it had been seen yet could not be quickly communicated to distant points.) Therefore Israelis using the Complete Jewish Bible should consult local calendars.
