

1. Wins over the last month

- This new school year launch has really been one with a ton of momentum from the get go. It made me realize that in this past year we were dealing with the lull after we graduated a big class the previous year. There is a ton of organic enthusiasm from both the students and the leaders.
- We had a few new students start to visit about a month back. These two sisters were really standoffish and nervous on their first visit but we kept engaging them and joking around with them. So far they have been to everything we have offered for the past month (outside of Sunday morning) and they have started bringing friends. They seem to love our group. It's been very encouraging and cool to witness.
- I have been nominated and elected to serve as our district's representative on the committee overseeing International Workers and Missions at the upcoming C&MA General Council. I am pretty excited about the work and the perspective that I will gain from serving on that committee.

2. Ministry challenges you are facing

- I can't really think of much at this time.

3. Goals for the next 30 days

- Get my Christmas Series for youth group outlined
- Work on some ideas for our DR share day in November
- Finish planning and pulling off the harvest party
- Connect with IW Dan Lawrence about his visit
- Recruit a few specific volunteers for sorting out OCC stuff (I have 2 that will be approached this week)
- Continue to work on and solidify adult Sunday school teachers and curriculum
- Look at freshening up the Spring schedule (I have been feeling that there is room for us to do something different). We have been dabbling with things for a few years.

4. Actionable items if needed
