NEW HEADQUARTERS ............................................. 50
2015 was a momentous year for Hudson Institute. The Obama administration continued its retreat from American international leadership—and autocracies, rogue regimes, and terror networks continued to consolidate their gains across the world. So the Institute's central mission became even more important: promoting robust U.S. global engagement and providing policymakers with sophisticated, timely counsel about how best to achieve a secure, free, and prosperous future. And our experts responded to this challenge with a vigor, visibility, and effectiveness rarely if ever matched in Hudson's history.

On the single most consequential and contentious foreign policy issue of 2015, the Iranian nuclear program, Senior Fellow Michael Doran led the way. His groundbreaking analysis of the P5+1 negotiations demonstrated beyond doubt that the Obama Administration's paramount goal was to restore Iran's place in the “community of nations”—and that containing Tehran's nuclear ambitions was a secondary consideration at best. Doran's essay, “Obama's Secret Iran Strategy,” was an immediate sensation: downloaded by more than 220,000 readers; cited by leading elected officials and policymakers in every Western capital; dramatically recasting and buttressing opposition to the P5+1 deal in Congress; and, even now, continuing to shape bipartisan efforts to repair the damage that misguided agreement has done to American interests and international security.

In response to the world's gravest current humanitarian catastrophe, Senior Fellow Nina Shea took action. As Director of Hudson's Center for Religious Freedom (CRF), Shea has long been a prominent voice on behalf of persecuted believers across the globe—especially Muslim minority groups, Kurds, Yazidis, and Chaldean and other Christian communities in the Middle East. But in 2015, with homicidal ISIS militants posing an immediate and existential threat to Christians in particular, CRF decided to take on a direct and practical mission: Shea designed and supervised an emergency airlift of Christian refugees from beleaguered frontline camps in Iraqi Kurdistan to asylum and safety in the Slovak Republic. That remarkable project was the focus of a special ABC News 20/20 report shortly before Christmas.
On perhaps the most important long-term geostrategic issue of the day, China, Senior Fellow Michael Pillsbury led the way. Just a few weeks into the year—before China’s faltering economy and unprecedented military buildup in the South China Sea started making headlines—Pillsbury published The Hundred-Year Marathon, a magisterial account of the history, theory, and official policy that animates Beijing’s approach to the outside world. Pillsbury’s book won wide acclaim and enjoyed a lengthy stay on bestseller lists in the United States, Japan, and Taiwan.

Hudson also made a concentrated effort to address domestic and international security threats that are still emerging—and too often overlooked. Our comprehensive study on bioterror and associated pandemic disease risks—A National Blueprint for Biodefense, the product of a Hudson-sponsored blue-ribbon commission co-chaired by former Sen. Joseph Lieberman (I-CT) and former Gov. Tom Ridge (R-PA)—reached alarming conclusions about current U.S. preparedness, and proposed a detailed plan for coordinated national action. Inspired by a similarly future-oriented concern over U.S. maritime force-projection capabilities, Hudson’s Center on Seapower, directed by Senior Fellow Seth Cropsey, released a major study, Sharpening the Spear: The Carrier, the Joint Force, and High-End Conflict, a detailed analysis of next-generation combat scenarios—and a powerful argument for the continued centrality of Navy aircraft carriers in U.S. military operations.

Hudson is dramatically expanding its reach and impact overseas.

These initiatives—and many other Hudson research projects outlined in the following pages of this report—were an unmistakable demonstration of the Institute’s significant, growing influence on American policy debates. Nearly 20 different Hudson experts were called to testify at formal congressional hearings in 2015, some of them multiple times. And hardly a day went by when someone from Hudson wasn’t being asked for advice by a leading member or senior committee staffer in the House and Senate. Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR) put it best: “When Hudson sends a scholar up to Capitol Hill—whether it’s for testimony in a formal committee hearing or just private consultations—senators, congressmen, and their staff listen, because they know that Hudson Institute scholars have a deep, rich historical and analytical understanding of the issues.”

As the map on page 16 makes clear, Hudson is dramatically expanding its reach and impact overseas, as well. In September, for example, with the assistance of the Lithuanian Foreign Ministry, Charles Davidson, executive director of Hudson’s Kleptocracy Initiative, organized a landmark conference of international human rights organizations, the 2015 Vilnius Democracy Forum. Our ongoing program to promote closer U.S.-Japan cooperation on advanced, applied science and defense technology produced two top-level seminars for members of Congress and the Japanese Diet—and, in December, a private briefing for Prime Minister Shinzo Abe during Hudson’s annual Tokyo workshop at the Japanese Ministry of Defense.

Hudson, in short, is very much on the move, a rising force in the world of serious, cutting-edge policy research—and a key player at the crucial intersection of ideas and practical politics. We continue to add valuable depth and breadth to our already formidable team of experts. Not coincidentally, we have just concluded a record-setting year of fundraising at the Institute, bolstered by our new Chairman’s Advisory Board; our expanded series of New York luncheon briefings; a highly successful annual gala in Manhattan, at which Henry Kissinger presented Rupert Murdoch with Hudson’s Global Leadership Award; the extraordinary generosity of an anonymous donor, whose $10 million contribution to our endowment was the largest gift the Institute has ever received; and the invaluable support of many other Hudson friends to whom we are deeply grateful.

By the time this 2015 Annual Report goes to press, the Institute will have relocated to a new, state-of-the-art, much larger Washington headquarters facility at 1201 Pennsylvania Avenue, N.W. We hope to see you there very soon—as Hudson pursues even more ambitious plans for 2016 and beyond. Please come by to visit with us on your next trip to the nation’s capital.

Best regards,

Sarah May Stern

RESEARCH & IMPACT
Hudson’s primary mission is the promotion of renewed American leadership and international engagement.

2015’s seismic upheavals in foreign affairs and global security arrangements made Hudson’s primary mission—the promotion of renewed American leadership and international engagement—more important than ever. These challenges were especially acute, and so Hudson’s response was especially energetic, with respect to the Middle East.

The possibility that Iran might soon acquire nuclear weaponry became the most hotly contested international security question of the year. Hudson experts were active and influential in the debate on the P5+1 negotiations with Tehran from its earliest days. Senior Fellow Hillel Fradkin and Senior Vice President Lewis Libby published a series of essays in the Wall Street Journal, The Weekly Standard, The American Interest, and National Review detailing critical facilities-inspection and sanctions-evasion loopholes in the text of the Geneva accord. Hudson Fellow Rebeccah Heinrichs published a complementary series of critiques (in The Hill, The Weekly Standard, Real Clear Defense, and Breaking Defense) underscoring the P5+1 deal’s failure to include clear, separate restrictions on Iran’s nuclear-capable ballistic missile program—and moderated a standing-room-only Hudson panel on that problem featuring Rep. Ron DeSantis (R-FL), chairman of the House Oversight Committee’s National Security Subcommittee. By late fall, Heinrich’s warnings proved grimly prescient, as Tehran repeatedly defied the international community with long-range missile test launches.

More broadly, Senior Fellow Michael Doran published a conversation-changing February analysis of the Geneva agreement in Mosaic Magazine, “Obama’s Secret Iran Strategy,” a penetrating look at the administration’s grand, long-term strategy for the Middle East: to elevate the Iranian regime into a major regional power and, however implausibly, “normalize” and moderate its behavior through global economic engagement and integration. Doran’s article had an enormous and immediate effect on debate over the P5+1 accord, was downloaded more than 220,000 times within hours of its publication, and was closely read—and subsequently cited—by senior policymakers in Washington and overseas capitals alike.

Elsewhere in the Middle East, jihadist terror groups, the Islamic State’s would-be “caliphate” most notable among them, continued to wreak unprecedented havoc—and organized or inspired deadly attacks across the globe, as well. The Institute has long been a leading source of original research about religious and political extremism in the Muslim world; Hudson’s Current Trends in Islamist Ideology, the preeminent scholarly journal on radical movements in the Islamic Middle East, North Africa, and Asia, published two more issues in 2015, Volume 18 in May and Volume 19 in September. And throughout the year, as the United States and many other Western governments appeared increasingly uncertain about appropriate and effective Middle East policy responses, Hudson experts produced a steady stream of up-to-the-minute commentary and influential guidance.

Hudson’s Michael Doran, Michael Pregent, Eric B. Brown, and Peter Rough co-authored our widely circulated, much-discussed briefing paper, “How to Destroy Islamic State (and How Not To),” an unsparing survey of theoretical and practical flaws in current U.S. Middle East strategy—and a detailed, five-step proposal to correct those flaws, contain and eventually eliminate ISIS, and begin to rebuild regional security and stability.

In an eye-opening January report published in Foreign Policy, “Allah Versus KFC,” Hudson’s Sam Tadros (with co-author Mokhtar Awad) called attention to the activities of a previously little-known 43-year-old American named Shahid King Bolsen, the chief theoretician and propagandist behind a series of Cairo bombing attacks on both Egyptian policemen and symbols of “the West” like KFC franchises. Tadros’ exposé made the front page of the New York Times, was quickly translated into Arabic, and created a sensation in the Egyptian press, triggering local alarm about a new generation of violent, post-Muslim Brotherhood militants, and prompting Egypt’s Ministry of the Interior—two days after the report’s publication—to launch a major manhunt for Bolsen’s network of associates.

Also in January, and again in the fall, when Islamist terror struck the heart of Europe with the Charlie Hebdo and Hypercacher murders and even bloodier November 13th attacks in Paris, Hudson’s Benjamin Haddad took a leading role in analyzing and explaining the French government’s response: its substantially revised, more resolute counterterrorism policies, its unilateral airstrikes against ISIS in Syria, and President François Hollande’s “state of emergency” decree. Haddad published three major essays on France’s newly forward-leaning international security strategy—“The Fall and Rise of France” in The American Interest; “How France Became an Iran Hawk” and “France’s Forever War” in Foreign Policy—and was a frequent guest commentator on broadcast networks like CNN, Fox News, and C-SPAN.

With France—and much of the rest of Europe, Jordan, and Turkey—overwhelmed and politically divided by a torrent of Syrians and Iraqis fleeing terror and civil war, Hudson leveraged its decades of experience in international human rights issues on behalf of the most vulnerable Middle Eastern refugees: the Christian, Yazidi, Mandeans, and other non-Muslim religious minorities whom ISIS has singled out for horrific persecution. Distinguished Scholar Walter Russell Mead published a number of editorials highlighting the crisis and proposing urgent U.S. relief action. Senior Fellow Nina Shea, director of Hudson’s Center for Religious Freedom (CRF), filed a series of reports in National Review documenting the fact that thousands of captured
Christian and Yazidi women and children had been forced into sex slavery by ISIS militants. In May, Shea and Mead convened an emergency, high-level conference on the plight of Middle Eastern religious minorities, headlined by Cardinal Timothy Dolan of New York.

The gravity of the situation also prompted Hudson to take a remarkable step beyond the usual think tank work of research and public advocacy: Shea and CRF designed and directed an ambitious, four-month program—supported by television producer Mark Burnett and many other concerned volunteers and donors—to airlift Iraqi Christians from imperiled front-line refugee camps in Erbil to safety and asylum in the Slovak Republic. This successful rescue effort was later the subject of a special, Christmas-week feature report on the ABC News program 20/20.

Further complicating the Syrian conflict was Vladimir Putin’s fall 2015 decision to bolster the embattled government of his ally Bashar al-Assad by launching a protracted and punishing Russian aerial campaign targeted not against ISIS, as Moscow half-heartedly claimed, but almost exclusively against U.S.-backed, Western-leaning rebel groups. Hudson Senior Fellow David Satter published a telling analysis of the incursion’s implications for Russian domestic politics in the Wall Street Journal. Benjamin Haddad and Hudson Russia expert Hannah Thoburn co-authored a widely cited Foreign Policy essay connecting Putin’s military initiative in Syria with Kremlin strategy concerning a much closer perceived foe: NATO and its nervous member states on Europe’s eastern frontier. And Senior Fellow Michael Doran’s Mosaic Magazine piece “Our Man in Moscow” considered the ominous geopolitical significance of post-Soviet Russia’s reemergence as a Middle East powerbroker.

The shadowy financial politics of Putin’s Russia are a principal focus of Hudson’s Kleptocracy Initiative (KI), which completed three major projects in 2015. In April, Hudson and KI hosted a panel discussion on prospects for a worldwide extension of the 2012 anti-corruption sanctions Congress leveled against Russian officials implicated in the detention and murder of Moscow attorney Sergei Magnitsky. Featured speakers included author Bill Browder, Magnitsky’s close friend and colleague, and Rep. James McGovern (D-MA), an original cosponsor of the proposed “Global Magnitsky Human Rights Accountability Act.” (Also in late April, Hudson President & CEO Kenneth R. Weinstein delivered formal testimony about that pending legislation before the House Foreign Affairs Subcommittee on Africa, Global Health, Global Human Rights, and International Organizations.)

In September, Hudson and KI (in conjunction with the Eastern Europe Studies Center and Vilnius University) organized and sponsored the first annual Vilnius Democracy Forum, a two-day conference in Lithuania on security, democracy, freedom, and the rule of law in NATO’s easternmost countries—and Russia’s efforts to undermine those countries’ continued alliance with the West. Speakers at the Forum included Georgian Minister of Defense Tinatin Khidasheli; Ambassador Maria Leissner, Secretary General of the Community of Democracies; Jerzy Pomianowski, Director of the European Endowment for Democracy; Ana Maria Gomes (Portugal) and Gabrielius Landsbergis (Lithuania), both members of the European Parliament; and Executive Director Charles Davidson along with his Hudson colleague Walter Russell Mead.

Human rights abusers, corrupt foreign officials, and their active confederates continue to launder massive amounts of ill-gotten money through disguised or poorly monitored purchases of Western real estate. So in December, Hudson and KI hosted the American premiere of the U.K. documentary From Russia with Cash, a searching investigation of that phenomenon in London—and organized a corresponding seminar about the need for stronger laws to prevent the facilitation of such money laundering, wittingly or unwittingly, by realtors, attorneys, and businessmen here in the United States.

Also in 2015, as Beijing’s ruling party made headlines with its construction of militarized artificial islands in disputed waters of the South China Sea, Hudson Senior Fellow Michael Pillsbury published a detailed account of Chinese geostrategic theory and practice, The Hundred Year Marathon (Henry Holt & Co.). Pillsbury’s book was an instant bestseller in the United States, Japan, and Taiwan, earned worldwide acclaim, and was widely circulated and carefully read by senior American lawmakers on Capitol Hill and officials in the executive branch. Building on that remarkable success, Pillsbury soon launched Hudson’s new Center for Chinese Strategy, which immediately began publishing first-ever English translations of Chinese government documents—previously unknown in the West—revealing crucial details of Beijing’s defense and foreign policy doctrines. This project, too, was extensively circulated and briefed in Congress.

Regional alarm resulting from China’s continuing military buildup and unprecedented territorial claims underscored the importance of Hudson’s close, longstanding ties to America’s key Western Pacific allies. Japan took particularly striking steps to protect its maritime and security interests, easing constraints on its armed services and defense industry for the first time in decades—and Japanese officials simultaneously sought guidance from Hudson experts on practical means to expand and enhance U.S.-Japan economic and security cooperation. In April, during a state visit to Washington by Prime Minister Shinzo Abe, Hudson’s 2013 Herman Kahn Award honoree, Hudson hosted two major workshops on U.S.-Japan defense-technology and applied science collaboration for members of Congress and the Japanese Diet. Following these high-level meetings, Hudson’s senior management team and top Asia experts were asked to brief Prime Minister Abe during their annual December Tokyo workshop with the Japanese Ministry of Defense.

South Asia, too, was the focus of special Hudson effort in 2015. Our comprehensive report “Modi: One Year On” analyzed Indian economic and security progress under the administration of Prime Minister Narendra Modi, elected in 2014 with an overwhelming mandate for major policy reforms. Elsewhere in South Asia, Nepal experienced a devastating earthquake in late April, drawing attention to an often-overlooked part of the region. The following week, Hudson convened a landmark conference in New York on South Asia’s least understood—and most commonly overlooked—frontier. “The Future of the Himalayas” featured a unique array of regional experts, diplomats, activists, and religious leaders—including His Holiness the Gyalwang Drukpa and Hudson Senior Fellows Husain Haqqani and Eric Brown—in an extensive discussion of the area’s serious near-term challenges and significant long-term strategic, ecological, and cultural importance.

In June, Hudson’s Center for Global Prosperity (CGP) released the Index of Philanthropic Freedom, the first global-scope study to measure and compare national incentives and barriers to charitable giving. Local experts from 64 different countries participated in the study, which evaluated legal regimes governing philanthropy in both developed and developing countries. CGP’s new Index, extensively covered by print and broadcast news organizations like the Chronicle of Philanthropy and CNN, was quickly recognized as a much-needed, go-to source for the assessment of international policies designed to expand—and improve the effectiveness—of private giving to the needy poor.

Throughout the year, Hudson experts diligently worked to promote national security interests and defense capabilities here in the United States. Three such Institute projects, in particular, garnered unusual attention and proved especially influential.

Sharpening the Spear: The Carrier, the Joint Force, and High-End Conflict (co-authored by Seth Cropsey, director of Hudson’s Center on Seapower; Center deputy director Bryan McGrath; and Timothy A. Walton), a major study of the Navy’s aircraft carrier fleet, concluded that the platform’s unmatched flexibility and adaptability make the carrier an irreplaceable element of future U.S. force-projection strategy. At Hudson’s October launch event for Sharpening the Spear, keynote speaker Rep. Randy Forbes (R-VA), Chairman of the Seapower and Projection Forces Subcommittee of the House Armed Services Committee, warmly praised the report’s analytical rigor and insight and welcomed its support for a robust, reinvigorated, and modernized Navy fleet.

With state-sponsored computer hacking—like North Korea’s brazen attack on Sony Pictures in late 2014—becoming an increasingly urgent concern in Western military, intelligence, and commercial circles, Hudson also released Cyber-Enabled Economic Warfare: An Evolving Challenge, an exhaustive, two-volume analysis of U.S. cybersecurity vulnerabilities with detailed recommendations for proactive defensive measures by government agencies and private-sector enterprises. Edited by Dr. Samantha Ravich of the Foundation for Defense of Democracies and including contributions from a wide range of subject-area specialists (like Hudson Senior Fellow Abram Shulsky), the final report was made public at a major Institute forum in August featuring Hudson Distinguished Fellow Mike Rogers and Dr. Michael Hsieh of DARPA, among other experts in the field.

The ambitious, Hudson-organized and sponsored Blue Ribbon Study Panel on Biodefense—co-chaired by former Sen. Joseph Lieberman (I-CT) and former Gov. Tom Ridge (R-PA)—released its headline-making summary report, A National Blueprint for Biodefense, in October. The culmination of an almost yearlong series of private meetings and public hearings on the nature and scale of current bioterror threats, A National Blueprint for Biodefense concluded that the United States remained ill-prepared for potential bioterror attacks or pandemic disease outbreaks—and called for significant new initiatives to upgrade and better coordinate national defensive efforts and responsive public health programs. The report was heavily briefed on Capitol Hill and was the subject of formal hearings before the Senate Committee on Homeland Security and Government Affairs and the House Homeland Security Committee.

Hudson domestic policy activities and publications in 2015 included a widely noted white paper on reform of the U.S. Copyright Office; an important new book by Adjunct Fellow Brendan Brown on the Federal Reserve Bank’s “quantitative easing” strategy; and a detailed proposal by Senior Fellow Jeffrey Anderson for a lower-cost, broader-coverage legislative alternative to the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act. Distinguished Fellow Christopher DeMuth continued his work on structural issues affecting the Constitution’s balance-of-power design; DeMuth’s October Wall Street Journal editorial, “The Decline and Fall of Congress,” for example, was a pointed critique of Congress’s surrender of authority to the executive branch, and prompted intense, high-level debate in Washington’s policymaking community. And Senior Fellows Harold Furchtgott-Roth and Robert McDowell of Hudson’s Center for the Economics of the Internet, both of them former FCC commissioners, remained highly visible media experts on questions of broadband regulation and net neutrality, making regular appearances throughout the year in the Wall Street Journal, USA Today, the Los Angeles Times, Market Watch, and on CBS, Fox News, and Bloomberg TV.

OUTREACH & GOVERNMENT RELATIONS
Hudson’s 2015 outreach strategy emphasized impact and visibility with key policymakers and opinion leaders.

The events of 2015 marked a turning point in world affairs as new threats like cyberwarfare and metastasizing jihadist terror seriously unsettled the geopolitical order and global economy. So in the face of challenges unlike any in recent history, Hudson’s 2015 outreach strategy emphasized impact and visibility with key policymakers and opinion leaders—through multiple, complementary communications channels. Hudson met its most important audience—members of Congress; presidential candidates; senior foreign officials; distinguished print and broadcast journalists—wherever they might be.

DIGITAL COMMUNICATION, PUBLICATIONS, AND MEDIA COVERAGE

Our recently redesigned website, social media platforms, event broadcasts, and email newsletters proved a tremendously effective digital hub for this effort. User traffic and engagement on the new hudson.org—and viewershhip of our public events, both live on our homepage and after-the-fact on our YouTube channel (youtube.com/user/HudsonInstitute)—saw unprecedented growth. And the Institute’s similarly expanding Twitter presence further extended our reach and strengthened our brand. Well more than half of our experts now maintain individual Twitter feeds, which—together with our main feed (@HudsonInstitute) and high-volume, interactive public-programming feed (@HudsonEvents)—produced nearly a quarter-million regular followers for Hudson’s real-time commentary and analysis.

All of Hudson’s work is distributed and promoted with these online tools: formal reports, briefing papers, market reports, book-length monographs, serialized journals, written testimony, and Institute-published commentary. And Hudson experts are prized contributors to an impressive array of other national and international publications. More than once a day on average in 2015, a Hudson byline appeared in the Wall Street Journal, USA Today, the Washington Post, The Weekly Standard, Foreign Affairs, Forbes, the New York Times, Bloomberg, National Review, Mosaic Magazine, Nikkei Asian Review, L’Opinion, or The American Interest, for example. Hudson-produced analysis was also routinely translated for republication in newspapers throughout Japan, India, Israel, France, the United Kingdom, the Netherlands, Denmark, Norway, Cyprus, Turkey, Costa Rica, Pakistan, Australia, and China—reaching a combined audience of many millions.
During 2015, Hudson organized more than 90 events at its Betsy and Walter Stern Conference Center in Washington, D.C.

Hudson experts were in heavy demand on national and international broadcast networks, too. CNN, Fox News, PBS, Bloomberg, C-SPAN, France24, the BBC, and Wall Street Journal Live all regularly rely on Institute fellows—both for incisive commentary about breaking news and for prescriptive analysis of vital but still-unresolved policy questions. In November, for example, within hours of the Islamic State terror attacks on Paris, Hudson experts were being interviewed live on multiple news networks, shaping the conversation about how the United States and its allies can and must confront violent jihadists operating within their borders. And the Institute has become a particularly valuable resource for U.S.-sponsored civilian media projects devoted to the promotion of democratic values overseas, with Hudson scholars and event footage frequently featured on Voice of America.

EVENTS

Event programming at Hudson continues to offer the Washington policymaking community—and the public at large—a unique platform for deeply informed and civil debate about the most important issues of the day.

During 2015, Hudson organized more than 90 events at its Betsy and Walter Stern Conference Center in Washington, D.C. Guest speakers and panelists included Sen. Joseph Lieberman, Gov. Tom Ridge, Sen. Tom Daschle, Rep. Jim Greenwood, and Sec. Donna Shalala on emerging bioterrorism threats; Coptic Orthodox Church Bishop Anba Angaelos and Melkite Greek Catholic Archbishop Jean-Clement Jeanbart on the persecution of Christians in the Middle East; author Bill Browder on Russia, human rights, and the Global Magnitsky Act (named for Browder’s close friend and colleague Sergei Magnitsky, who died in 2009 after eleven months of brutal detention in a Moscow prison); former U.S. Ambassador to Turkey Ankara James Jeffrey on Turkish-Kurd relations; retired Gen. Jack Keane on the Iran nuclear deal; Hideaki Watanabe, commissioner of Japan’s Acquisition, Technology and Logistics Agency; former White House Chief of Staff Mack McLarty on free trade in the Americas; Radio Free Asia president Libby

Also at the Institute’s headquarters—and brand-new for 2015—was our Dialogues in American Strategy and Statesmanship interview series, moderated by Hudson Distinguished Scholar Walter Russell Mead, which welcomed especially prominent policymakers for 90 minutes of intimate, candid, one-on-one conversation about critical challenges in international affairs, national security, economics, and civil society. Our inaugural Dialogues guests were Sen. John McCain (R-AZ) and Sen. Tom Cotton (R-AR), both of whose appearances were televised in their entirety by C-SPAN and were the subject of extensive next-day newspaper coverage.

2015’s Sixth Transatlantic Think Tank Conference—an annual project Hudson cosponsors with the Wilfried Martens Centre for European Studies (Brussels, Belgium) and the International Republican Institute—was hosted in Washington and involved a series of sessions on the U.S.-E.U. relationship and strategies to strengthen alliance relationships in Europe, Asia, and the Middle East. Speaking as honored guests of the conference were European Parliament Vice President Antonio Tajani, former Slovak Prime Minister Mikulas Dzurinda, former Irish Prime Minister John Bruton, and H.E. Gerard Araud, France’s Ambassador to the United States.

GOVERNMENT RELATIONS

Hudson experts provide lawmakers, executive branch officials, political candidates, and the broader Washington policy community with timely information, analysis, and practical recommendations on a wide range of pressing domestic and international issues. In 2015, the Institute was particularly active on Capitol Hill—both in small, private meetings and large, public committee hearings—as senior members of Congress and their top staffers wrestled with legislative and oversight challenges involving defense and foreign affairs, U.S. intelligence programs, transportation and energy, telecommunications policy, healthcare reform, illegal drugs and criminal justice, the federal budget and regulation, and trade and economics.

Institute fellows delivered formal congressional testimony on FCC reform and net neutrality; strategies to reduce violent crime and substance abuse; policymaking to counter anti-American propaganda; terror groups like ISIS and methods to aid the religious minorities they imperil; the future of Egypt; Pakistan’s nuclear program; and U.S. naval capabilities. When the Senate Armed Services Committee undertook its first major review of American global strategy and military doctrine in decades, the Committee’s chairman specifically requested testimony from Hudson’s Distinguished Scholar Walter Russell Mead and Bryan McGrath, deputy director of the Institute’s Center for American Seapower. Likewise, during the intense debate over the P5+1 nuclear agreement with Iran, Hudson’s experts played a crucial role in dissecting and challenging that accord’s specific provisions—and clarifying its broader significance within the Obama administration’s high-risk plan for long-term U.S. reengagement with Iran. Mead and Senior Fellows Michael Doran and Douglas Feith all provided testimony before House and Senate committees reviewing the P5+1 deal and current U.S. policy in the Middle East.
Almost as often as Hudson experts were on Capitol Hill in 2015, leading members of Congress were visiting Hudson to confer with our scholars or participate in our public events. Speaking at Hudson conferences were Senate Majority Leader Mitch McConnell (R-KY) on his chamber’s legislative agenda as the 2016 presidential campaign proceeds; Sen. Bill Cassidy (R-LA) about a major new legislative initiative to redress shortcomings in the Affordable Care Act; Sens. John McCain (R-AZ) and Tom Cotton (R-AR) on flaws in the P5+1 nuclear agreement; Rep. Ron DeSantis (R-FL), chairman of the House Oversight Committee’s Subcommittee on National Security, about Iran’s ballistic missile program; Sen. Deb Fischer (R-NE), chair of the Armed Services Subcommittee on Emerging Threats and Capabilities, on cybersecurity issues; Rep. Jim McGovern (D-MA), co-chairman of the House’s Tom Lantos Human Rights Commission, about kleptocratic regimes and human rights; Rep. Mike Pompeo (R-KS) of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence on the fallout from Edward Snowden’s disclosures; and Rep. Randy Forbes (R-VA) about the U.S. Navy’s carrier fleet and China’s challenges to American security interests in the Western Pacific.

- Law Enforcement’s Role in Drug and Crime Reduction
The size of Hudson’s footprint in public policy depends to a great extent on the generosity of foundations, private individuals, and corporations. Tax-deductible contributions to Hudson are a high-value investment in our core mission: promoting the strong and engaged U.S. leadership necessary to secure the vital interests of our nation and its allies, and a better future for the world as a whole.

Hudson Institute is a nonprofit, nonpartisan 501(c)(3) research organization. Financial support for the Institute is gratefully accepted in the form of cash, securities, stocks, gifts, bequests and other planned giving, and contributions to our endowment. Donors are also invited to become sustaining members of Hudson’s Chairman’s Advisory Board, which grants participants special, behind-the-scenes access to our experts and programs in Washington—and admission to our New York Discussion Series luncheons in Manhattan.

Additional information about opportunities to support Hudson and its work is available online at www.hudson.org/about/support.

IN MEMORIAM

Hudson mourns the loss of two invaluable colleagues and friends.

AMY A. KASS
1940 – 2015

Our beloved friend and Hudson colleague Amy A. Kass joined the Institute in 2005 after a long and distinguished career as an award-winning teacher of the humanities at the University of Chicago.

At Hudson, Amy drew on the best of literature, philosophy, and song to illuminate and deepen our understanding of timeless moral questions. Amy understood that if we seek to become or to make better human beings, citizens, or charitable givers, more than cultivation of the mind is required. That work involves an engagement of the heart, as well—something best achieved through individual and collaborative contemplation of thoughtful and artfully conceived stories about the struggle for purpose and improvement amidst civic turmoil, moral confusion, or spiritual crisis.

As a proud and reflective practitioner of teaching, she will remain an indelible and inspiring presence to each of her many students, colleagues, and friends—and to readers of the two widely acclaimed anthologies she edited here at Hudson: Giving Well, Doing Good: Readings for Thoughtful Philanthropists, and What So Proudly We Hail: The American Soul in Story, Speech and Song. Amy Kass taught us to be better people, better citizens, in a better nation. And she taught us well. Amy’s wisdom, friendship, unforgettably radiant smile, and mischievous sense of humor will be sorely missed.

BILL SCHWEITZER
1944 – 2015

William H. Schweitzer was a leading and universally admired figure in American law, government, and the public life of Washington, D.C. for many decades—and a much beloved friend and Trustee of Hudson Institute. He joined our board in March 2011 out of deep concern over the direction of our country, and served with distinction on both our nominating and governance committees. He believed in our scholars and our mission and always sought to broaden Hudson’s network and influence.

Bill began his distinguished career as an Assistant U.S. Attorney in the District of Columbia. After joining Baker Hostetler’s Washington office in 1973, Bill helped create, build, and lead one of America’s elite practices in federal election, campaign finance, securities, antitrust, white-collar criminal, and—perhaps most famously—sports law, serving for many years as lead Washington counsel to both the American League and Major League Baseball as a whole.

At Hudson, Bill will always be remembered—and most deeply missed—for his unfailing loyalty, generosity, gentle wit, extraordinary sweetness of temperament, and unpretentious but undeniable brilliance and talent. Hudson could not have had truer and more valuable colleague and advisor than Bill Schweitzer. All of us will miss Bill, his gentle demeanor, his stories about baseball and Capitol Hill, and his deep concern and profound gratitude for our nation.
The 2015 Global Leadership Award was presented to Rupert Murdoch, Executive Chairman of 21st Century Fox, at a gala dinner in New York City on November 30, 2015. Murdoch was honored for his singular vision in a decades-long career and strategic leadership that has transformed the global media landscape. He joins a distinguished list of past Hudson Institute honorees that includes Ronald Reagan, George Shultz, Mitch Daniels, Joseph Lieberman, David Petraeus, and Shinzo Abe.

“There is a yearning outside the country for American assertiveness and engagement,” Mr. Murdoch said in his acceptance speech. “As we have seen in Syria and in Ukraine and in the streets of Paris, without this country’s self-confident championing of that ‘human quest for freedom and humane values,’ global affairs collapse into nightmare—the policy wasteland becomes fertile territory for terror.”

Dr. Henry Kissinger, former U.S. Secretary of State and National Security Advisor, gave a special introduction at the event. “It is essential that the United States, with its history of democracy and its commitment to world order play a significant role, and history will not permit the United States to lead from behind,” Kissinger said. “Wherever he has been active, and above all in the United States in the last decade, [Rupert Murdoch] has provided a thoughtful alternative to conventional wisdom, a strong point of view, and a courageous stand in sometimes difficult situations.” Hudson Board Vice Chair Marie-Josée Kravis and Hudson President Kenneth R. Weinstein also addressed the Institute’s guests.

Hudson’s new Global Leadership Award highlights the prerequisites for global leadership—strategic vision and dedication to strong alliances, open markets, and innovation—while celebrating and recognizing the farsighted individuals who have made exceptional contributions to the security, prosperity, and freedom of the United States and its allies.
