

Boat History Report Welcomes James Nella as New Account Executive

Bringing Industry Expertise to Strengthen Transparency and Trust in Boat Sales

Boat History Report is pleased to announce the addition of Daniel "James" Nella as its new Account Executive. In this role, James will work closely with brokers and dealers nationwide to promote transparency and trust through Boat History Report's comprehensive history reports.

With a strong background in sales and consumer behavior, James is dedicated to helping industry professionals reduce risk, enhance their reputation, and drive stronger sales. By leveraging Boat History Report, he empowers brokers and dealers to build buyer confidence, ultimately leading to higher sales values and smoother transactions.

Originally from Italy, James holds a master's degree in Management and Communication from the University of Verona. His international perspective and passion for strategic communication bring a fresh approach to supporting the boating community.

"We're thrilled to welcome James to the team," said Grant Brooks, Founder of Boat History Report. "His expertise and dedication to transparency align perfectly with our mission to support brokers and dealers in delivering confidence to buyers."

For more information about Boat History Report, visit BoatHistoryReport.com.

About Boat History Report

Boat History Report is the industry's leading provider of watercraft history reports, trusted by yacht brokers, boat dealers, marine surveyors, law enforcement, and financial and insurance institutions. For over 20 years, our extensive database has empowered professionals and consumers with critical insights to mitigate risk, enhance transparency, and build buyer confidence. As the most trusted resource for watercraft history, Boat History Report is an essential tool in the used boat buying and selling process.

For more information, visit BoatHistoryReport.com or contact us at info@boathistoryreport.com.