

2019 DAMALI BOOKER 1L MINORITY JOB FAIR

The 1L Job Fair is a project conducted by the Diversity Committee of the NBA. It is held in January/February of each year for diverse students who are in their first year of law school, for summer clerkships between their first and second year. In 2003, the job fair was named in honor of Damali Booker—daughter of Cyrus and Cherie Booker—who had participated in the job fair as a 1L, was in her third year of law school and had already accepted a position with an employer she originally met at the job fair. Damali died unexpectedly before her graduation from law school.

Diversity Committee Mission: The Committee's primary focus is the promotion of opportunities for racial minorities in the Nashville Bar and the community. As the Diversity Committee, the committee's efforts have been expanded to encompass diversity and inclusion based on other characteristics within the Nashville legal community. Toward that end, the goal of the committee will be to implement programs that: provide employment opportunities, assist with career development and professional advancement, and increase the number of diverse students attending and successfully completing law school.
