

Andrew M. Gross, MD, JD • Dallas

Dr. Andrew Gross has been litigating medical malpractice cases for over 20 years. He went to medical school at the Albert Einstein College of Medicine in New York and did his General Surgery Residency at the SUNY Downstate Medical Center in Brooklyn, New York. He did his cardiothoracic training at the Brooklyn VA Medical Center. After practicing medicine in New York City for several years, Dr. Gross decided on a career change and attended Seton Hall University School of Law in New Jersey. During law school, he was a consultant to the largest PI firm in New Jersey. He was then recruited by Mel Morgan in Dallas and worked for Morgan & Weisbrod for a year. He then went out on his own and has been a solo practitioner for many years. Most recently, he and his New Mexico partner secured a jury verdict in Albuquerque for $3 million against an OB who ignored his patient's increasing hypertension leading to her death. They had already settled for the hospital's limits.

Rachel A. Gross, JD • Dallas

Rachel graduated from Boston University with an English degree and later attended South Texas College of Law. After law school, Rachel took a position with Williams, Kherkher, Hart, Boundas in Houston, working in pharmaceutical litigation with a focus on transvaginal mesh litigation. In 2014, she transferred to Dallas and took a position with Miller Weisbrod as a litigating medical malpractice cases.