I got period blood on hotel sheets

Highlight highlighted highlight highlight highlight highlight highlight highlighted highlight highlight highlight highlight highlight highlighted highlight highlight highlight highlight highlight highlighted highlight highlight highlight highlight highlight highlighted highlight highlight highlight highlight highlight highlighted highlight highlight highlight highlight highlight highlighted highlight highlight highlight highlighted highlight highlight highlight highlighted hi all were a guest here and when the guest left there was abundant blood on the sheets and mattresses, the sheets were to be thrown and the mattress was almost cleaned and the floor was also cleaned for the annoyance of our cleaners who are not nurses and do not pay to clean such human body. We are considering charging the customer who since left $100 for sheets and cleaning as we have the credit card number on the file, btw it was not the result of 'that time of the month'.. ׀ What is your idea? This fair is what other hostel owners will do.. An Australian hotel has been criticised for period shaming after sharing photos of blood-stained sheets and towels on social media with the hashtag Disgusting and the caption it should be Shark Week. Quest Palmerston in the Northern Territory posted four photos on Facebook last week, writing: What an interesting week.. ׀ It should be Shark Week. #blood #cleaning #housekeepers #disgusting. A hotel employee has been suspended and the company was forced to apologise after a massive backlash led to charity share dignity. The women's advocacy group uploaded a screenshot of the original post, with the caption: There are no word quest Palmerston right now. Shaming a woman for getting her period and posting pics on social media. The post has now been taken down, but in this day and age it has poor taste. Art HouseThe word shark week is a colloquial for weeks a woman is on its own period. The unauthorized post by a Quest Palmerston employee was deeply troubling and we understand the strong community response, Brand said in a statement. This Quest apartment goes against the brand values of the hotel and does not follow the franchiser's current social media guidelines. The employee responsible for the post has been suspended and will now be subject to official internal investigation. Quest also apologized in another Facebook post, saying, We are extremely apologetic to everyone for the recent post and are commenting on the Quest Palmerston Facebook page that has been deleted, it does not conform to our standards or the Quest brand. We have addressed the post with responsible employees. However, critics were dishonoured, with nearly 200 largely negative comments left below the apology. Questions that still need to be answered are why there is such a culture in your organization that allows your payment outrageous Donny Baz said. Is there no level of respect? How did posting an employee in the first place be acceptable? Do I conclude that management workplace ethics is appalling and it's just the norm over there? Mocha Fields added: Is this your idea of forgiveness? Your staff would never embarrass a woman in your hotel for something he has no control over and yet anywhere in his 'apology' you actually accept how old period shaming is or the steps you'll be taking to ensure it happens again. Supporting free-thinking journalism and attending independent events Quest Palmerston is now disabling reviews on its Facebook page. QUESTION: Thank you for advocating one marriage. (Ekmarriage?) When I fell in love with my gloriously kinky and GGG wife several years ago, we were honest about our sexual desires — vast and widespread — and we negotiated an arrangement that works for us. We encourage each other crushing out, and we both just want to be present while one of us is banging that crush out. Your column gave us the tools we need to talk with other potentially kinky people. Thank you! Anyway, on our question: when one is staying in a hotel, what is the protocol for engaging in sheet staining activities? For example, if a session can spread santorum, menstrual blood, ejaculation, etc., on all sheets, what to do? Is it better to cover the bed in towels and stain them instead? Are there all the dirty sheets in a day's work for the maid, or should we avoid such activities in hotel rooms? We don't want to grieve the housekeeping staff - and we always leave a tip for the maid! - But we don't want to refrain from sex just because my wife is on her period! - Sheets tarnish the intense nook one after another: you're welcome to one-day- the right noun form of the adjective Ekangi - and I'm glad it's helped you and successful encounters with wife-out-of-conversation crushes, stains, and I believe you and wife strive to make sure those encounters are as rewarding for as they are for you. Now, about those sheets... If you've booked a hotel room, stains, and it drops in shark week regular for wife or a certain former senator (drops out?) when you have sex, there's always the option of bringing your towels from home that can already be santorum — or to hide menstrual-related stains or disguise menstrual discharges of a color. But let's say you don't want to bring towels from home — which is an admittedly thing of the other emotion in the anus. Should you put down hotel towels on the bed or mess up the sheets? Sheets messed up, please, the head of housekeeping at the hotel said, where I happened to stay when your question came up. (HOH bet that I don't have her name, the hotel where she agreed to talk to me at Or even the city where it's located.) We bleached the holy cat out of those sheets, HOH continued. And it's easy to get stains out of sheets from towels. And the lower cost for changing sheets — at least is ours. And should anyone do anything if they've made a mess of sheets? If you want to be a total sweetheart, strip the bed, Hoh said. Pull the sheets and leave them balled to the floor. All women know what that means, and I promise you that no one goes poking at the sheets left on the floor. They toss that ball in the cart and send it straight to the laundry. Where they bleach the hell (and blood and santorum) out of them. Finally, stains, thank you for always leaving a tip for the maid. It made me feel less lonely — I always leave a tip for the maid too — and it gives me the opportunity to encourage others to do the same. Anyone who can afford a night or two in a hotel — on business, on vacation, on someone else's wife — can afford to leave a few bucks for the maid. Q: I'm a 25-year-old straight guy. One of my best friends is gay, and I'm in gay bars with him twice a week or so. (We like to drink!) My question: What's the right response when I get hit by men in gay bars? If a guy comes on strong, I kind of feel bad saying, I'm straight. Because I don't want him to think I'm saying, you're disgusting. So what's the etiquette for a straight guy at a gay bar? Is it wrong to say that you have a lover rather than just saying you are straight? - Not overly worried useless unit one: People who are either not lovers or are lovers, but are in monolithic relationships would often say, I have a boyfriend to get rid of a guy at a time who they don't find attractive. So to be honest, NOCLUE. Figuring out he never had a shot at you because you're straight will be easy on a man's ego to wonder what it is you and your fictional boyfriend didn't find attractive about him. Now, some gay friends will get annoyed when they discover that the man they've invested 10 whole minutes in the eye isn't gay, but most will welcome his appearance as proof that — forgive me — it gets better. Straight dudes hanging out in gay bars with their gay friends? Straight friends who are quite safe in their sexuality are comfortable with being seen as sex objects by other men? Fixed signs of progress, NOCLUE. That some gay friends can't waste some precious minutes of their lives to seduce men they can't suck is a small price to be reminded that we have to pay to live in a less homophobic world. Q: I have a super hot, thoughtful, caring girlfriend with a high libido with which I share many long-term goals. The problem is that she bugs dirt from me. Chewing with her mouth open, she hears music I dislike, and she swears on inappropriate I'm in my mid-30s and not sure what I should do. Settle? - Second Thought One: We have something in Common, ST: I once met a man who was super warm and caring and thoughtful, a man whose libido corresponds to my own and whose long-term goals aligned with me, and who just so happened to mess out of me. Here's what I did: I married that bastard. My husband still bugs dirt from me sometimes, as if I undoubtedly sometimes bug the mess from him. But there's no such thing as a bug-free boyfriend, girlfriend, husband, wife, unicorn, gimp or whatever. LTRs are about to identify bugs that can fix some care and constant prodding — that mess open her mouth with chewing dirt — and learning to accept and finally ignore the bugs that will never change any amount of prodding. And take it from me, ST: Warm, thoughtful, caring, similarly libidinous, and shared long-term goals is not a package that comes with every day. You could do a lot worse. Watch straight right: In 2010, Americans voted Republican hopeful — despite 30 years of evidence to the contrary — that the GOP might know something about creating jobs. wonder! Turns out that all the GOP knows is how to wage war on American women. The GOP's attack on abortion morphed into an attack on Planned Parenthood, which morphed into an attack on 98 percent of contraception, which eventually made U.S. women use or use contraception. (Sluts and prostitutes, one and all, according to Rush Limbaugh.) The GOP's war on choice, contraception, cancer screening and women won't end until it's fighting bastards are driven out of office. distressed? splendid! Do something about it. Go a pro-choice Democrat who is running for office against an anti-choice, anti-female bastard and that Dem send an investigation or, if you live in his or her district, volunteer for that Democrat. Fight back! Bet!
