I

O Chloe callow dony Knock-kneed in the Trees why wobbl'st thou thither wench stencled & lily-livered at every lizard?
come fawn,
spawn I'm a lover not a lion

II

blush Venus' fair-haired novice
but those cheeks will grow a wavy brush & fair will fleck with snow quickly as blood now rushes reckless & harsh:
you'll poised your rayer as you ask Did the same blage kindle cheeks
that now ignites my eyes?

Horace, Odes: I, 23

III

Horace, Odes: IV, 10

nor graze, nor gaze heuconoe but take it by the horns for Taurus that glittering bull will never reap your harvest.
The sky's
a cold country & even in this land winter comes like a Tuscan sea

Horace, Odes: I, 11

translated by Ronald Johnson (U.S.A.)

Two Poems

you can draw faces too little tail

then where have you gone?

lost in the woods, I suppose not knowing I'm touching your toes on the sand

I'll always be walking

walking

walking

even if the colors stop to kiss once in a while

I'll always be walking

walking

and you right beside me little sparrow who has no color at all

Robert Simmons (U.S.A.)

Flamingoes

Knees-bend, backward, that's the latest Material-test for stress. It looks best With long reversible scarves of necks Knitted in a kind of flex.

So dire creations in creamy flame for you!
Though the whole, I'd say, hardly goes With a black beard and a Roman nose
And the cries of burning Carthage too.

The Buffalo

Once he roamed the wide, wide plains
And look at what he got for his pains.
The sun is setting behind the brown hill.
What is a Buffalo without a Bill?

Perseids

The air that loves you too keeps your bright shape.
You sleep inside.

The sulking bear jigs to a half-heard tune remembers bees

The striped cat dreams
mackerel

It was not you I saw an hour ago.

Unwatched
the stars keep coming down like snow

Ann McGarrell (U.S.A.)

The Stork
standing out of the sun A gray delicate night-cloud Drifts across the horizon Bowed.

Bestiary (1914)

Cat

Mine be the house where you would find A woman in her right mind,
A cat to walk among the books,
And friends about at any time - I bear no fruit without these roots.

Rabbit
Bonny's another bunny I know:
To take it alive sometime!
Its warren's low among the thyme
In the sweet country of So.

Dromedary

Don Pedro had four dromedaries, Don Pedro d'Alfarobeira had,
And he rode around the world for a god.
- The very diversion I'd organize If I possessed four dromedaries.

Sirens

How should I know, Sirens, where your longing Comes from when your night sea cries go throbbing?
Machine-made voices fill me like the sea's.
My singing hulls have names. They are the years.

Crayfish
Uncertainty, my dearest friend:
Look at us taking fish,
fish, doubtful to the end, Backing away, backing away.

Elephant
Grovy for the elephant's mouth - And a treasure in my own.
Blood-red death!... My fame is worth What I count out in words of song.

Carp
Carp in your garden pond or lake, How long time keeps your hearts awake!
You seem to swim out of Death's mind - Fish of such melancholy bird.

Guillaume Apollinaire

trans. by Edwin Morgan (Scotland)

Make Do

The small small bunches of the blackcurrant!— hardly grapes from the famous wadis of Jericho.
But let them be, let them quench what thirst they can,
and amuse the little birds among the berries of currants in miniatures of promised lands.

Renga haikai (Italy)
trans. Edwin Morgan (Scotland)

Two Roots

Two fir tree roots, old and fat,
In the wood are having a chat.

What at the top is being stated Is down here bitterly debated.

A motherly squirrel sitting there Is knitting stockings for the pair.

One says: "cuff"—the other: "cuff", Which, for one day, is quite enough.

Christian Morgenstern (Germany)
trans. Astrid Gillis (Scotland)

Chloe

little paper-boats with cargoes of dreams and all the tenderness
I feel for you are sailing in your hair.

We must not talk lovely and sensitive is this how:
love - an airy parachute
and yet so boastful

Kurt Sigel (Germany)
trans. J.F. Hendry (Scotland)

Poem

| A silence world
| where only objects speak
| man centres
| woman roots
| her branches announce
| it!
| children waving in
| the sun.

Michael Shayer (England)
