COURSE DESCRIPTION

An exploration of music in film and visual media illuminating creative practice. Modes of critical listening and viewing are discussed, unfolding models of meaning in the analysis of an array of visual works utilizing sound and music as a primary agent of expression. Not an historical survey (comprehensive chronology is not the focus), cultural context and artistic trends in visual-music practice are considered as backdrop for understanding imperatives (artistic and practical) of composers and directors working with music in film and media. Through selected survey, analysis, and discussion, participants achieve greater understanding of creative potentials in visual-music collaboration.

REQUIREMENTS

Composers and filmmakers will be arranged in alternating pairs throughout the semester to work together on analysis of music from various films and on a final creative project at the end of the semester that applies learned concepts and techniques creatively. The final project will require production of both original music and video elements by composers and filmmakers in collaboration.

GRADED ASSESSMENTS

- micro-analysis presentations and discussions (in-class and online)
- large scale collaborative film analysis project
- collaborative media project
- (graduate students will write an additional analysis paper)
