In 2012, Texas revised its QAP to encourage more LIHTC developments in high-opportunity neighborhoods with lower poverty rates following remedial action in a fair housing case (ICP v TDCHA 2008). This research examines the impact of the changes to policy setting and siting of LIHTC projects in the Dallas Fort Worth Metroplex. The study will capture the effect of changes on two key stakeholders in LIHTC project developments - developers and tenants.

I systematically evaluated changes to the QAP language incentivizing the siting of LIHTC projects and correlated these changes with spatial analyses of project development before and after 2012.

- Analyze QAPs from 2002 to 2022 across incentive parameters.
- Make a database of LIHTC projects in DFW with their detailed scores across parameters.

- Check with NHPD to understand the correlation between units' preservation and other affordable units.
