COURSE GOALS AND OBJECTIVES:
The skills of a great lead trumpet player include the following: lead AND section playing, excellent sight-reading skills, improvisation, empathy, well-roundedness and collaborative problem solving within the ensemble regardless of the size and genre. A degree in jazz trumpet as a lead specialist must prepare students to become the musician he/she aims to be whether that of a trumpet player in a symphony POPS orchestra, a lifetime career in one of the service bands, Broadway shows in New York or that of a soloist or leader in a traveling group that performs and records on a regular basis. Significant knowledge of styles from the 1930s to that of today is required and expected.

JAZZ TRUMPET (LEAD AND JAZZ) STUDIO PHILOSOPHY
I have always tried to recognize and respect each unique student's different view and desire for playing the trumpet regardless of style or specialty. I encourage each student to find his/her own voice and philosophy in the trumpet world. While encouraging this, I feel that it is my duty to introduce areas that the students may not have discovered or even thought about. One thing I know for sure is how to make a living as a trumpet player in today's world. It is my responsibility to help them attain the knowledge and develop the tools necessary to make the living they are aiming for as a Lead, Classical or Jazz Trumpet artist.

In my studio, the students study traditional trumpet methods in addition to Lip Flexibility, Daily Routine, Finger Technique, Range, Sound, and Scales. As lead trumpet players have to do (or really all trumpet players), the students will find it necessary to continuously assess and evaluate chop strength, sound over entire horn while building endurance without breaking down muscles. Being a lead trumpet player also requires a definitive historical knowledge of many styles from that of the Swing era, Frank Sinatra early eras to the later eras, those of the Road bands of the 60's, 70's and 80's and that of the West Coast, Chicago style, to that of the New York style of lead trumpet playing. It is also very important to know what is currently the “norm” for lead trumpet players in the service bands, radio orchestra’s and of course what is happening in NY and LA as far as recording. Listening and transcribing lead trumpet parts are essential in attaining this knowledge. Musical phrasing is especially important as the lead trumpet often defines the sound of the band. Transcribing is not only for “right notes and rhythms” but for every nuance, phrasing and inflection that particular lead player is doing on this specific recording.
Jazz trumpet study (for lead players) will deal primarily with solo continuity, melodic retention, ear development, use of dynamics, musical phrasing and rhythmic development. In Jazz playing, a good understanding of the modes of major and minor scales as well as the pentatonic, harmonic minor, melodic minor (jazz), diminished and augmented scales will also be reinforced. Harmonically my emphasis is more guide tone oriented, with the prime emphasis on “getting over the bar line” or controlling the harmonic resolution through clarity in your lines. Focusing on building solos with patient development of ideas and discussion of how new ideas can grow from these ideas is an important lesson. Devices such as phrase linking, sequencing, rhythmic displacement and development of rhythmic motives can assist in tying the solo together and telling a story, but the most important advice can be the use of space and dynamics.

An important emphasis in the jazz trumpet lesson is also on repertoire. In addition to the fundamental trumpet study daily, students (Lead and Jazz Trumpet) are expected to learn the melody and changes to a minimum of ten tunes per semester. This is required to develop a battery of tunes that they will feel comfortable, sound good playing, and to indoctrinate them into the harmonic and melodic patterns present in many of the standard jazz tunes. Lead players will also transcribe and/or learn 5-10 important lead parts each semester as well as two transcribed jazz solos from the Jazz repertoire. Jazz players will also transcribe 4 major solos and also play/transcribe various lead trumpet parts.

I also believe that studies in other areas of trumpet playing are essential in providing the tools it will take to play Broadway Shows. These areas include Piccolo trumpet playing, C trumpet playing, and transposition study. Not always popular with Jazz majors but essential these days.

LEARNING GOALS

Trumpet (Lead emphasis)

1. Critical thinking
   Students will demonstrate the advanced application and transfer of music cognition in the areas of daily practice, study, and listening.

2. Logical reasoning
   Students will demonstrate the application and transfer of advanced information concerning difficult performance expectations and stylistic requirements from Improvisation to classical performance.

3. Students develop skills in communicating clearly
   The student demonstrates the verbal and written communication skills necessary to effectively articulate their work while working with others within the studio class.

4. Students develop their leadership and service potentials
   Students will demonstrate the knowledge and skills sufficient to work as a musically literate citizen in the role of a leader and/or in collaboration with others of all diverse cultures.

5. Students become independent, lifelong learners
   Students will also demonstrate advanced skills in independent professional growth.
6. Students develop a sense of values that guide personal decision making
   Students will demonstrate a sense of value in daily practice in all areas of trumpet performance including, sound, range, flexibility, improvisation and classical trumpet playing that validate devotion and philosophy within the jazz education and trumpet performance arena.

7. Students develop intercultural competencies and the ability to work in diverse groups

Trumpet fundamentals goals and objectives
Sight-reading, classical etudes, jazz tunes and various brass playing principles are to be studied. Developing a strong foundation in brass playing will allow the student to choose the type of playing that he/she prefers. Whether a symphonic, commercial or jazz trumpet player, the trumpet demands the majority of your time in the formative years, devoted to warming up, developing a daily routine, scales, arpeggios, transposition, phrasing, and musicianship. Strong knowledge of the instrument will allow the jazz or classical player to concentrate on the details demanded of any specific performing situation.

Content
We will study and play a regular routine/warm-up consisting mostly of flow studies. I plan to spend approximately fifteen minutes on this area of trumpet playing every week, which allows the student to evaluate and research sound and general maintenance issues.

Trumpet fundamentals might include study in the following etude books as well as others:

- Arban
- Clarke Technical Studies
- Ernst Sachse
- Odd Meter Etudes-Gates
- Herbert Mitchell Book II-III
- Sigmund Hering
- Charlier 36 Plus

STUDENT ASSESSMENT
Both the Technical Jury and Final Jury will be weighed heavily in the grading process. Students are expected to pass the Technical “Scale” Jury and will be given ample opportunity to do so. There is no excuse except for poor preparation, that any student would fail this portion of the Jury process. See Jury hand out for further explanation.

GRADES
